EYKT, eykð, f. three or half-past three o'clock P.M.; many commen-aries have been written upon this word, as by Pal Vídalín Skýr., Finn hanson in H. E. i. 153 sq. note 6, and in Horologium, etc. The time eykð is clearly defined in K. þ. K. 92 as the time when the sun has past o parts of the 'útsuðr' (q. v.) and has one part left, that is to say, half-past-three o'clock P.M.: it thus nearly coincides with the ecl. Lat. nona (three o'clock P.M.); and both eykt and nona are therefore used indiscrimi-nately in some passages. Sunset at the time of 'eykð' is opposed to sune at the time of 'dagmál,' q. v. In Norway 'ykt' means a luncheon ten about half-past three o'clock. But the passage in Edda—that tumn ends and winter begins at sunset at the time of eykt—contrasted the commentators, who believed it to refer to the conventional
l. winter, which (in the old style) begins with the middle of October, and ends six months. In the latitude of Reykholt—the residence of Snorri—the sun at this time sets about half-past four. Upon this statement the commentators have based their reasoning both in regard to dagmál and eykt, placing the eykt at half-past four P.M. and dagmál at half-past seven P.M., although this contradicts the definition of these terms in the law.
The passage in Edda probably came from a foreign source, and refers not to the Icel. winter but to the astronomical winter, viz. the winter solstice the shortest day; for sunset at half-past three is suited not to Icel., but to the latitude of Scotland and the southern parts of Scandinavia.
The word is also curious from its bearing upon the discovery of America by the ancients, vide Fb. I. c. This sense (half-past three) is now obsolete in Icel., but eykt is in freq. use in the sense of triborium, a time of three hours; whereas in the oldest Sagas no passage has been found bearing this sense—the Bs. i. 385, 446, and Hem. l. c. are of the 13th and 14th centuries. In Norway ykt is freq. used metaph. of all the four meal times of the day, morning-ykt, midday-ykt, afternoon-ykt (or ykt proper), and evening-ykt. In old MSS. (Grág., K. þ. K., Hem., Heið. S.) this word is always used eykð or eykþ, shewing the root to be 'auk' with the fem. inflex.
-eð; it probably first meant the eke-meal, answering to Engl. luncheon, and thence came to mean the time of day at which this meal was taken. The ecl. law dilates upon the word, as the Sabbath was to begin at 'hora nona,' hence the phrase, eykt-helgr dagr (vide below). The word can have no relation to átta, eight, or átt, þaga voeli. At present Icel. say, at eykta-mótum, adv. at great intervals, once an eykt, once in three hours. I. half-past three; þá er eykð er útsuðr-átt er EYRIR, m., gen. eyris, dat. and acc. eyri; pl. arur, gen. aura, dat. aurum; a word prob. of foreign origin, from Lat. aurum, Fr. or, Engl. ore; (A. S. ora is, however, prob. Danish.) The first coins known in Scandinavia were Roman or Byzantine, then Saxon or English; as the old word baugr (q. v.) denoted unwrought, uncoined gold and silver, so eyrir prob. originally meant a certain coin: I. an ounce of silver or its amount in money, the eighth part of a mark; an eyrir is = sixty pennies (pennin-gar) = three ortog; tutugu penningar vegnir í örtug, þrír örtugar í eyri, átta arur í mörk, 732. 16; silfr svá sleigt at sextigri penninga görði eyri veginn, Grág. i. 500; penning, þat skal hinn tíundi (prob. a false reading, x instead of lx) hlutr eyris, 357; hálf eyris met ek hverjan, I value each at a half eyrir, Glúm. (in a verse); leigja skip þrem aurum, to hire a boat for three arur, Korm.; einn eyrir þess fjár heitir alóðs-festr, Grág. i. 88; the phrase, góldinn hverr eyrir, every ounce paid; galt Guðmundr hvern eyri þá þegar, Sturl. i. 141; gjalda tvá aura fyrir einn, to pay two for one, Grág. i. 396, ii. 234; verð þá at hálfri mörk vaðmála eyrir, then the eyrir amounts to half a mark in wadmal, i. 500; brenst silfr, ok er eyririnn at mörk lögaura, pure silver, the ounce of which amounts to a mark in lögaurar, 392; hring er stendr sex aura, a ring worth or weighing six arur, Fms. ii. 246; hence baugr tví-eyringr, tvítug-eyringr, a ring weighing two or twenty arur, Eb., Glúm.

F (eff), the sixth letter, was in the Gothic Runes, on the Bracteates, and on the stone in Tune, marked \mathfrak{F} , a form evidently derived from the Greek and Latin; hence also comes the Anglo-Saxon \mathfrak{F} called feob, and in the Scandinavian Runes \mathfrak{F} called fé (= fee, money), fé veldr enda rögi, Rkv. 1. The Runic alphabet makes f the first letter, hence this alphabet is sometimes by modern writers called Fupork. The first six letters are called Freys-ætt, the family of Frey; perhaps the oths called this Rune Frauja = Freyr, the lord. Only in very early Icel. MSS. is the old Latin form of f used: at the beginning of the 13th century the Anglo-Saxon form \mathfrak{F} (derived from the Rune) prevailed; and was employed in printed Icel. books till about A. D. 1770, when the Latin f came into use. In very early MSS. \mathfrak{F} and \mathfrak{Ft} are very difficult to distinguish from \mathfrak{F} and \mathfrak{Ft} . Emendations may sometimes be made by varying this in mind, e. g. hósti, Am. 95, should clearly be read hóftú hóft þú, from hesja,—proving that this poem was in writing not later than about A. D. 1200, when the Anglo-Saxon letter was introduced.

A. PRONUNCIATION.—At the beginning of a syllable always sounded Engl. f; but as a medial and final, it is often pronounced and sometimes spelt v, especially after a vowel, so that in af, ef, lauf, gefa, hafa, afa, lifa, lif, gröf, f is pronounced like the v, as in Engl. grave. Foreign proper names, Stefan (Stephen), etc., are exceptions, where f not initial has aspirate sound. For the exceptional spelling of f as b vide introduction to B. (pp. 48, 49.) The Icel. dislike a double f sound, which is only found in a very few modern foreign words, such as kaffe, coffee; caff, Germ. strafe, punishment; koffort, a box (from French or Germ.); fúr, an offer; skoffinn, a monster; skeffa, a sheep; or busbel; skúffa, a drawer; eff, the name of the letter itself, cp. Skálda 166.

B. SPELLING. I. as an initial the spelling never changes; medial and final the form f is usually retained, as in álft, kálfr, sjálfr, lí, arf, orf, úlft, etc., af, gaf, haf, etc., although the sound is soft in all these syllables. Some MSS. used to spell fv, especially after an l, sialfvann (sum), halfvann (dimidium), etc.; in the 14th century this was common, but did not continue; in Swedish it prevailed, hence the mod. Swed. forms fv, drifva, etc.

II. the spelling with f is against the true etymology in many cases, and here also the spelling differs; this is especially the case with the final radical v or u (after a vowel or after l or r), which, being in some cases suppressed or obsolete, reappears and is differently spelt; thus, örfar, arrows (from ör); snjófar (nives), snow, and snjófa, to snow (from snjó); háfan (acc.), bigb (from hár); mjófan, thin (from ör); sæfar (gen.), the sea (from sær): the partly obsolete dat. forms fv, mjólvi, Mávi, bólvi, heyvi, hörv, smjörvi, lævi from öl (ale), mjöl (meal), hey (hay), etc. are also spelt öfvi . . . heyfi, cp. e. g. Eb. 94 new note 8: so also adjectives, as örfan (acc. from ör), liberal: nouns, völfa or völva, a prophetess.

III. the spelling with ft in such words as, aptan, evening; aptr, after; leiþtr, lightning; driþtr, drift; þtr, Germ. dust; heipt, cp. Germ. bestig; kraptr, Germ. kraft; apatri, tri, = astari, aft, behind; eptr, after; skipta, to shift; loþtr, Germ. loþ; kjöþtr, Germ. kiefe; opt, often; nipt (from nefi), a sister; hapt, baft, hepta, to baft; gipta, a gift; rapt, a rafter; tópt, cp. Engl. toft, in toft; skapt, Engl. shaft, Dan. skaft; þopta, Dan. tofte,—is against the sense and etymology and is an imitation of Latin MSS. The earliest MSS. and almost all Norse MSS. use ft, and so also many Icel. MSS., e. g. e. Flateyjar-bók, Hauks-bók, etc.; þt, however, is the regular spelling, and hence it came into print. The present rule appears to be to use þt wherever both consonants are radicals, but ft if the t be inflexive—thus ft part. from hafa, lift from lifa, hlift from hlifa; but in speaking þt and ft are both sounded alike, regardless of etymology, viz. both as ft or with a soft f sound; hence phonetic spelling now and then occurs in MSS., e. g. draft = drapt, from drepa, Fb. i. 149; efðe = æþði = æþti, from æ, to weep, Bs. i. 342; keyfti, from kaupa, Greg. 50; steyfti, from stypa.

β. a digraph ff or pf occurs a few times in MSS., efþtr, cp. 3. A. 2; loþfti = loþti, Greg. 72 (vide Frump. 100), but it never came into use; it reminds one of the pf which in modern German is so frequent: fm = f or m, e. g. nafm = nafn or namn, Mork. 60 and N. G. L. ssim; ff = ft also occurs in old MSS.

C. CHANGES.—The final soft Icel. f answers to Engl. f, ve, e. g. Icel. = Engl. life, but Icel. lifa = Engl. to live; gefa, to give; hafa, to have; afa, to leave. Again, the spurious Icel. f (B. II) usually answers to Engl. o or the like, e. g. örfar = Engl. arrow; snjófar = Engl. snow; már máfi, Engl. mew; Icel. nær (the v is here suppressed), cp. Engl. narrow; Icel. vi, cp. Engl. lewd, etc. etc. In Danish the soft f is usually spelt with v, e. g. balv, kalv, bav, give, love, sove, = Icel. hálf, kálfr, haf, gefa, lofa, fa, whereas the Swedes frequently keep the f. In German a final b answers to Icel. f; Germ. geben = Icel. gefa, Engl. give; Germ. kalb, erbe, Icel. kalfr, arfi, etc., see introduction to B. Again, in German a final r answers to Icel. f and Engl. p, e. g. Icel. lauf = Icel. hlauþ, Engl. þ; Germ. kauf = Icel. kaup, Engl. cheap; Germ. schiff = Icel. skip, Engl. þ; also skiff; Germ. treff = Icel. drep; Germ. tief = Icel. djúpr, Engl. þ.

deep; Germ. baufen = Icel. hópr, Engl. heap; Germ. rufen = Icel. hrópa; Germ. schaffen = Icel. skapa, Engl. shape; Germ. saufen = Icel. súpa, Engl. to sup; Germ. bofte = Icel. huppr, Engl. bip; Germ. greifen = Icel. gripa, Engl. to grapple, grip; Germ. gaffen = Icel. gapa, Engl. gape; Germ. offen = Icel. opinn, Engl. open; Germ. affe = Icel. api, Engl. ape; Germ. triefen = Icel. drjúpa, Engl. drip; Germ. tropfen = Icel. dropi, Engl. drop. As to the use of the initial f, the Engl., Icel., Swed., and Dan. all agree; the High Germ. spelling is confused, using either f or v, but both of them are sounded alike, thus voll = Engl. full, Icel. fullr; vier = Engl. four, Icel. fjórir; vater = Engl. father, Icel. faðir, etc.: but fisch = Engl. fish, Icel. fiskr; fest = Engl. fast, Icel. fastr. This German v, however, seems to be dying out (Grimm, introduction to F).

2. for the change of fn and mv, see introduction to B: f changes to m in a few Icel. words, as himin, qs. himinn, cp. Engl. heaven; helmingr, a half, from halfr, half.

D. INTERCHANGE.—The Greek and Latin p answers to Teutonic and Icel. f; thus, pater, paucus, piscis, pénne, púp, πάλος, péu, pellis, πίων, pinguis, plecto, pes, πόδ-ός, pallo, etc., cp. Icel. faðir, fúr, fiskr, fimur, furr, foli, fé, fell (feldr), feitr, flétta, fet and fótr, fölr, etc.; Lat. portare = færa, Engl. to ford; se-pelio = fela; πτερόν = fjöðr and fjör; πνέω and πνεύμα, cp. inása; Lat. per, pro, pro-, cp. fyrir; Lat. pléuus, pleo, πλέω, πλέος, cp. fullr; πλοῖον = fley; Lat. prior, πρώτος, cp. fyrir, fyrstr; Lat. primus, cp. frum-; Lat. plures, plérique, πολλός, πλείστος, πολύς, = fjöld, fjöld, fleiri, flestr; Lat. plicare = falda; Lat. pretium, cp. fríðr, fríðendi, etc. (vide Grimm). Again, where no interchange has taken place the word is usually borrowed from the Greek or Latin, e. g. förkr, Engl. fork, = Lat. furca; Icel. fals, falskr, = Lat. falsus; Icel. fálki = Lat. falco, etc.

Bishop Bjarni, a native of the Orkneys (died A. D. 1222), gives the name of 'fald' to the helmet; Kormak, in the 10th century, speaks of the 'old fald'. In Normandy and Brittany a kind of 'fald' is still in use; it may be that it came to Icel. through Great Britain, and is of British origin; a French fald (Franseiskr, i. e. Britain?) is mentioned, D. N. 359. In Icel. the fald was, up to the end of the last century, worn by every lady,—aðr sérhver fald þar frú | falleg þótti venja sú, a ditty. The ladies tried to outdo each other in wearing a tall fald; keisti faldr, the fald rose high, Rm. 26; faldá hátt, Eb. FIMT or fimmt, f. a number of five: fimtar-tala, u, f. a set of five or multiple of five (as fifteen, fifty, etc.), Bs. i. 190. 2. [Swed. femt = a kind of court], a law phrase, a summoning before a court with a notice of five days: a standing phrase in the Norse law, so that the verb fimta means to summon: so, fimtar-gríð, n. pl. a truce during a fimt, N. G. L. i. 342, 351; fimmmtar-nafn, n. a citation with a fimt's notice, 86; fimmmtar-stefna, u, f. a citation before a court with a fimt's notice, K. Á. 184: the phrase gera e-m fimt simply means to summon, N. G. L. i. 346, passim; one fimt is the shortest notice for summoning, five fimts the longest,—fimm fimtum hit langsta, ef hann veit nær þing skal vera, 21:—the law provides that no summoning shall take place on Tuesday, because in that case the court-day would fall on Sunday, the day of summoning not being counted, N. G. L., Jb., and K. Á. passim.—This law term is very curious, and seems to be a remnant of the old heathen division of time into fimts (pentads), each month consisting of six such weeks; the old heathen year would then have consisted of seventy-two fimts, a holy number, as composed of 2 × 36 and 6 × 12.

With the introduction of the names of the planetary days (vide dagr) and the Christian week, the old fimt only remained in law and common sayings; thus in Hm. 73,—'there are many turns of the weather in five days (viz. a fimt), but more in a month,' which would be unintelligible unless we bear in mind that a fimt just answered to our week; or verse 50,—'among bad friends love flames high for five days, but is slaked when the sixth comes,' in a few cases, esp. in ecclesiastical law, sjaund (hebdomad) is substituted for the older fimt, N. G. L. passim; it is curious that in Icel. law (Grág.) the fimt scarcely occurs, as in Icel. the modern week seems to have superseded the old at an early time. compds:

Fimtar-dómr, m. the Fifth High Court in the Icel. Commonwealth, vide dómr, Grág. þ. þ., etc.; the form of the word is irregular, as it means the Fifth Court (added to the four Quarter Courts) = dómr hinn fimmti, as it is also called in Grág. þ. þ. ch. 24 sqq.; the old Scand. law term fimt seems to have floated before the mind of the founders, as fimmtdómr etymologically answers to Swed. femt, i. e. a court before which one has to appear a 'fimt' from the citation. Fimtdómms-eiðr, m. the oath to be taken in the Fifth Court, Grág. þ. þ. ch. 26, 27, Nj. 241; in Sturl. ii. 128 used of an oath worded as the oath in the Fifth Court.

FINGR, m., gen. fingrar, mod. fingrs; dat. fingri; pl. fingr; a neut. finger occurs in O. H. L. 73, 74, which gender is still found in Swed. dialects; the acc. pl. is in conversation used as fem., an Icel. says allar fingr, not alla fingr; [Goth. figgers; A. S. finger, etc.; whereas Lat. digitus and Gr. δάκτυλος etymologically answer to Icel. tá, Engl. toe, Germ. zehe, a finger of the foot].—a finger, Grág. i. 498, Hkr. ii. 380, 384, Magn. 518, passim: the names of the fingers—punal-fingr, the thumb; vísi-f., the index finger, also called sleiki-f., lick-finger; langa-töng, long-prong; græði-f., leech-finger, also, but rarely, called baug-f., digitus annuli; litli-f., the little finger. In the Norse law (N. G. L. i. 172) the fingers are taxed, from the thumb at twelve ounces, to the little finger at one ounce—not so in the curious lawsuit recorded in Sturl. i. ch. 18–27. Also a measure, a finger's breadth, Nj. 27, cp. MS. 732. 5: arithm. any number under ten, Alg. 362: botan., skolla-fingr, a kind of fern, lycopodium. fingra-járn, n. a 'finger-iron, a thimble (?)', Dipl. v. 18. fingr-hæð, f. a finger's height, as measure.

Síðu H. 9; the pun in Anal. 177 is a mere play of words. 4. finna at e-u, to censure, Fbr. 212, Edda (pref.), very freq. in mod. usage, hence að-finnsla and að-fyndni, censure; nearly akin is the phrase, þat eitt finn ek Gunnlaugi, at mér þykir hann vera úráðinn, that is the only fault I find with Gunnlaug, Ísl. ii. 217; ef nokkut væri þat er at mætti finna, if there was anything to blame, Sks. 69 new Ed.

De Admin. Imperii, ch. 9, where the Byzantine author gives some names of waterfalls in Russia in two languages, ρωσιστι and σκαβισιστι (Russian and Slavonic), with a Greek translation; ρωσιστι, a waterfall, being called βορσι or φωρος (e. g. οὐλ-βορσι = Icel. Hólm-fors, βαρου-φωρος = Icel. Bárufors), whereas σκαβισιστι it is called πραχ, i. e. porog or prag: Constantine in another passage states that the Russians were Teutonic or 'Franks': the Gardar (Russia Minor) of that time was in fact a Scand. country; even the name Russia is by some (P. A. Munch) explained as Scand., afterwards adopted for the whole empire; it was still regarded so by the Byzantine authors of the 10th century, as opposed to Slavonic]:—a 'force, waterfall, Landn. 291, 292; fors mikill er Sarpr heitir, Ó. RAKKA, u, f. [A. FRAKKI, a, m. [Fr. fraque], a frock, coat, mod. word, borrowed from frak.

FRAKR, adj. [Engl. and Germ. frank], this word never occurs in old texts, and in mod. usage only in the sense impertinent, intrusive.

FRAM, adv.—the Icel. has a triple adverbial form, fram, denoting going to a place (ad locum); frammi, the being in a place (in loco); fram, denoting going from a place (a loco)—compar. framarr (mod. mar) or framr, = Goth. framis; superl. framast (framarr) or framst: pronounced with a double m = frammi; and that such was the case is shown by the fact that fram is seen from Fms. vi. 385 and Skálda 168, 171. fram adv. with its compds and derivatives may be said to have been lost in Germ. as well as Engl., and at a very early time. Even Ulf. uses fram prep. in the sense of ámó, like the A. S. and Engl. from, Swed. från: in two passages Ulf. uses fram as adv., viz. Rom. xiii. 12, where he renders 'the night is far spent' (nóttin er um liðin of the Icel. N. T.) framis galeipan, which recalls to mind the Icel. fram-liðinn = deceased, and Mark i. 19, where προβαλνεν is rendered by gaggan framis: el. ganga framarr or ganga fram; cp. also the Goth. compds framts = progress, Philipp. i. 25; fram-aldrs = stricken in years; fram-vigis = further; fram-vairpis = further: in O. H. G. vram = ultra still exists, but is now lost in Germ. as well as in Engl.: the Icel., on the other hand, makes a clear distinction between the prep. frá (from) and fram, forward, = Gr. πρόσω, Lat. porro, pro-: in some compds the sense appears, e. g. framandi, a stranger, = Ulf. framapeis, prop. one who is far off or from far off; so also fram-liðinn, gone, past; ganga fram, to die.

A. fram, forward, (opp. to aptr, backward); aðra leið aptr en fram, xxxii. 18; hann féll fram á fætr konungi, he fell forward on his at the king's feet, Eg. 92; stefna fram (to go on) hina neðri leið, and brautin liggir þar fram í milli, id.; ef þeir vilja fram, or fram á fram, Sks. 483; fram rétt, straight on, Fms. ii. 273, v. 1.; fram, on, on! a war cry, Ó. II. fram is generally applied to any motion outwards or towards the open, opp. to inn, innar; thus fram denotes the outer point of view, fram á nes; Icel. also say, fram á sjó, towards the high sea, (but not inn at land, landwards); also, towards the verge of a cliff or like, fram á hamarinn (bergit), Eg. 583: when used of a house fram means towards the door, thus, vara fram í dyr (eldhúsi), but inn or innar (Östfoti (hence fram-bær), far hún ávalt borin fram ok innar, she was in a litter out and in, Bs. i. 343: of a bed or chair fram denotes outside, the side farthest from the wall, horfir hún til þils, en bóndi átti, she turned her face to the wall, but her husband away from it, 31.

β. again, Icel. say, fram á dal, up dale, opp. to ofan dalinn, down dale.

B. frammi, (for the pronunciation with a double m vide Skálda 169.) denotes in or on a place, without motion, and is formed in the same way as uppi from upp, niðri from niðr; Icel. thus say, ganga fram, niðr, upp, to go on, go down, go up; but vera frammi, niðri, uppi, to be in, etc.; if followed by a vowel, the final i may be dropped, thus, vera frammi á dal, or frammi' á dal, Hrafn. 6; sitja frammi' fyrir háseti (= frammi fyrir), Ó. H. 5; just as one may say, vera niðr' á (qs. niðri á) engjum, uppi' á (= uppi á) fjalli: as to direction, all that is said of fram also applies to frammi, only that frammi can but denote the being in a place; Icel. thus say, frammi á dal in a dale, frammi í dyrum in-doors, frammi á fjalli on a fell, frammi á gólfi on the floor, frammi á sjó, etc.; þeir Leifr sitja frammi í húsum, Fær. 181, cp. also Hrafn. 1; sitja (standa) frammi fyrir e-m, to sit (stand) before one's face, Hkr. ii. 81.

High Germ. freien and Dan. frie are borrowed from Low Germ.]:—to pet, an ἀπ. λέγ. in Mkv. 5.—annars barn er sem lífr at frjá, to pet another man's bairn is like petting a wolf, i. e. he will never return your love.  Fróðr chiefly refers to historical knowledge, 'hinn Fróði' was an appellation given to the old Icel. chroniclers—Ari Fróði, Brandr Fróði, Sæmundr Fróði, Kolskeggr Fróði, who lived between 1050 and 1150 A. D. But the Fróðians of the next age were seldom called by this name: Odd Munk the end of the 12th century) is only once called so, (Ing. S. fine); Snorri the 13th) twice, viz. Ann. 1241 in a single MS., and Sturl. iii. 98, in a part of the Saga probably not written by Sturla himself; Sturla who died in 1284) is never called by that name; and the only real Fróðian is Styrmir 'Fróði' (who died in 1245), though he least deserved the name. Of foreign writers the Icel. gave the name Fróði to Bede (du. pref.), whom they held in great honour.
 SÓMR, adj., akin to framr, prob. borrowed from Germ. fromm, Low
 i. from; it seems to have come to Icel. with the Hanseatic trade at end of the 15th century, and is found in the Rímur of that time, e. g.
 Helga R. 3. 22; from Luther's Bible and the Reformation it became freq. in the sense of righteous, pious, with the notion of guile- frómr og meinlaus, and often occurs in the N. T. and hymns, e. g. Pass.
 24. 9: it has however not been truly naturalized, except in the sense honest, i. e. not thievish, and ófrómr, dishonest, thievish, (a euphemism); sl-f., not slandering, speaking fair of other people. COMPDS: fróm-addressing any one, thus, Frú Kristínar, but Kristínar frúar; the gen. frúar occurs Fas. iii. 586, in a MS. of the 15th century; pl. frúr, but older form fruvor or frovur, e. g. frovor, Edda (Arna-Magn.) i. 96 (Kb.); but Ob. frúr, Hkr. i. 16: [freyja was origin. fem. of freyr, and prop. meant Lat. domina; Germ. frau; Dan. frue; no Goth. fraujō is found]:—a lady; in Icel. at present only used of the wives of men of rank or title,

 e. g. biskups-frú, amtmanns-frú; wives of priests are not called so: again, húsfreyja is more homely, Germ. hausfrau, Engl. housewife, always of a married woman, vide e. g. the þjóðólfr (Icel. newspaper); in the 14th century in Icel. frú was used of abbesses and wives of knights, but was little used before the 13th century: af hennar (the goddess Freyja) nafni skyldi kalla allar konur tignar (noble woman), svá sem nú heita fruvor, Hkr. l. c.; af hennar nafni er þat tignar-nafn er ríkis-konur (women of rank) eru kallaðar fruvor, Edda l. c.; Kolt haðði talat margt við frú eina ríka (of a foreign lady in Wales), Nj. 280: again, good housewives, such as Berghora in Njála, are called húsfreyjur, but never frúr; thus, kemsk þó at seinna fari, húsfreyja, Nj. 69; gakk þú út, húsfreyja, þvíat ek vil þik fyrir öngan mun inni brenna, 200; búandi ok húsfreyja, Grág. i. 157; göð húsfreyja, Nj. 51; gild húsfreyja, Glúm. 349, Bs. i. 535 :—the Virgin Mary is in legends called vár frú, our Lady; cp. jungfrú (pronounced jómfrú).
 FRÝGÐ, f., and fryktr, m., Stj. 26, 56, 77, [an unclass. word formed from Lat. fructus], blossoming; fegrð ok f., Stj. 14, 142; frygð ok feiti, of love, Lat. amores, Skáld-H. 5. 38, passim; and frygðugr, adj. amorous, Skáld-H. It is a bad word and quite out of use, and seems to have no connection with Germ. freude, which is a good Teut. word; the mod.

 frukt, n. humble compliments, and frukta, að, to make such compliments, in a bad sense, are perhaps akiu, but they are slang words.

frýjan, f. = frýja, Fms. v. 55.
FRÝNN or frýnilligr, adj.; this word is never used but as compounded with the prefix ú- (except Fas. ii. 351 in a bad and late Saga), viz. ú-frýnn or ú-frýnilligr = frowning. The sense as well as the etymology of frýnn is somewhat dubious; there is the Germ. frön or fröbn or fran; but that word seems purely German and is by Grimm supposed to be qs. fro min = my lord (vide Hel.); neither does Icel. frýnn or Germ. fröbn correspond properly as to the root vowel (cp. e. g. Germ. lobn = Icel. laun); on the other hand there is the Engl. frown, which in form answers to the simple frýnn, but in sense to the compd ú-frýnn; as no similar word is found in A. S. (nor in Germ. nor in Hel.), frown is most likely a Scand. word; and we suppose that the Icel. prefix syllable ú- is not in this instance = un-, that is to say, negative, but = of-, that is to say, intensive (= too, very, greatly); the original forms of frýnn, of frýnilligr were contr. and assimilated into ófrýnn, ófrýnilligr, meaning very frowning, and these compds then superseded the primitive simple word; this is confirmed by the freq. spelling in MSS. with 'of', e. g. of frýnn, Ó. H. 144; all-ofrýnn, Eg. Cod. Wolph.; heldr ofrýnn, Ó. H. 167; but yet more freq. with 'ú-', e. g. Orkn. 440, Boll. 358, Fær. 50, Fms. i. 40, Fb. i. 73; the ekki frýnn, Fas. l. c., is again a variation of úfrýnn; the statement by Björn that frýnn is = bland, affable, is a mere guess by inference from the compd.

FRÝSA, t. (hon frýsti ferliga, Sams. 9), mod. ad, to snort, wbinny, of a horse, Greg. 49, Karl. 3, 4, Fas. i. 60 (where better fnýsa, q. v.); akin are frýssa, ad, and frussa, to sport.

FRÆ, n. FYRIR, prep. in the Editions spelt differently; in MSS. this word is usually abbreviated either f (i. e. firir), or f̄, fur, fv̄r (i. e. fyfir); in some MSS. it is idiomatically spelt with i, ir̄, e. g. Arna-Magn. 382 (Bs. i. 263 sqq.); and even in the old Miracle-book Arna-Magn. 645 (Bs. i. 333 sqq.), just as ifir is written for yfir (over); in a few MSS. it is written as a monosyllable fyr, e. g. D. I. i. 475; Mork. passim; in Kb. (Sæm-Edda) occurs fyr telia, Vsp. i.; fyr norðan, 36; fyr dyrum, Gm. 22; fyr vestan ver, Hkv. 2. 8; in other places as a dissyll. fyrir, e. g. Hm. 56, Gm. 54, Skm. 34, Ls. 15, Am. 64, Hkv. 2. 2, 19 (quoted from Bugge's edition, see his preface, p. xvi); fyr and fyrir stand to one another in the same relation as ept to eptir, und to undir, of (super) to yfir: this monosyllabic form is obsolete, save in the compds, where 'for-' is more common than 'fyrir-'; in some cases both forms are used, e. g. for-dæming and fyrir-dæming; in others only one, but without any fixed rule: again, the forms fyr, fyr, or fire, which are often used in Edd., are just as wrong, as if one were to say epti, undi, yfi; yet this spelling is found now and then in MSS., as, fyr, Ó. H. (facsimile); fire, Grág. Sb. ii. 288 (also facsimile): the particles i and á are sometimes added, i fur, Fms. iv. 137; i fyrir, passim; á fur, Haustl. i. [Ulf. faur and faura: A. S. fore and for; Engl. for and fore-; Germ. für and vor; Dan. for; Swed. för; Gr. πρῶ, παρά; Lat. pro, prae.]

X. denoting capacity, in the same sense as 'at', C. II, p. 27, col. 1; scarcely found in old writers (who use 'at'), but freq. in mod. usage, thus, eigi e-n f. vin, to have one for a friend, in old writers 'at vin'; hafa e-n f. fífl, fól, to make sport of one. 2. in old writers some phrases come near to this, e. g. víta f. vist, to know for certain, Dipl. i. 3; víta f. full sannindi, id., ii. 16; hafa f. satt, to take for sooth, believe, Nj. 135; koma f. eitt, to come (turn) all to one, Lv. XI. joined with adverbs ending in -an, fyrir austan, vestan, sunnan, norðan, útan, innan, framan, handan, ofan, neðan, either with a following acc. denoting direction, thus, fyrir austan, sunnan... fjall, east, south of the fell, i. e. the eastern, southern side; fyrir neðan brú, below the bridge; fyrir út fjall = Lat. ultra; fyrir innan fjall = Lat. infra; fyrir handan á, beyond the river; fyrir innan garð, inside the yard; fyrir ofan garð, above, beyond the yard, etc.; vide these adverbs:—used adverb., fyrir sunnan, in south; fyrir vestan, in the west; fyrir norðan, in the north; fyrir austan in the east;—current phrases in Icel. to mark the quarters of the count cp. the ditty in Esp. Árb. year 1530; but not freq. in old writers, who simply say, norðr, suðr... , cp. Kristni S. ch. i: absol. and adverb., fyrir of uppermost; fyrir handan, on the other side:—fyrir útan e-t, except, save, Anal. 98, Kvk. 8; fyrir fram, vide fram.

For- and fyrir- as prefixes, vide pp. 163-167 and below: fore-, for-, meaning before, above, in the widest sense, local, tem and metaph. furbering or the like, for-dyri, for-nes, for-ellri, for-etc.

β. before, down, for-brekkið, bergis, -streymis, -vindis, -við etc. 2. in an intens. sense = before others, very, but not fr for-dyld, -góðr, -hagr, -hraustr, -kostuligr, -kuðr, -lífill, -ljótr, -pris, -r-snjallr.

II. (cp. fyrir, acc., C. IX), in a neg. or priv. sense few words occur even in the earliest poems, laws, and writers, e. g. í að, -átta, -dæða, -nám, -næmi, -ending, -sköp, -verk, -veðja, -viða, -vi-yuja, -yrtrir; those words at least seem to be original and vernacular: a later time more words of the same kind crept in: I. as early writers of the 13th and 14th centuries, e. g. for-boð, -bænir, -djarfa, -da (fyrir-dæma), -taka (fyrir-taka), -þóttir; fyrir-bjóða, -fara, -göra, -ko-kunna, -lita, -muna, -mæla, -vega, -verða.

2. introduced in sc words at the time of the Reformation through Luther's Bible and Ger hymns, and still later in many more through Danish, e. g. for-brjóta, -di-láta, -líkast, -merkja, -nema, -sorga, -sóma, -standa, -svara, -þemusta, several others; many of these, however, are not truly naturalised, but chiefly used in eccl. writings:—it is curious that if the pronoun be pl after the verb (which is the vernacular use in Icel.) the sense is in m cases reversed; thus, fyrir-koma, to destroy, but koma e-u fyrir can mean to arrange; so also fyrir-mæla, to curse, and mæla fyrir, to speak for; for-bænir, but biðja fyrir e-m, etc.; in the latter case the sense good and positive, in the former bad and negative; this seems to be clearly that these compds are due to foreign influence.

G

G (gē) is the seventh letter. In the old Gothic Runic alphabet (Golden horn) it is represented by X, which was probably taken from the Greek X. The later common Runic alphabet had no g, and made the tenuis k (ƿ, called Kaun) serve for both; still later, g was distinguished simply by a dot or stroke, ƿ̇ or ƿ̈, and this character was called 'Stunginn Kaun,' i. e. dotted or cut Kaun, just as the name of Stunginn Týr was given to cut or dotted t.

A. In Scandinavia the letter g begins many fewer words than in German or Saxon, mainly because the prefixed particle ge- is absent. In the fragments of Ulf., although so little is left, ga- is prefixed to about three hundred words, mostly verbs and nouns; in the Anglo-Saxon at least three or four thousand such words are recorded, and in modern German still more: indeed the number is so to say endless, as it can be put to almost any verb. In Icel. the only traces of this prefix are, I. in a few words retaining g before the liquids l and n (gl and gn): a. gl in the word glikr, similis (and derivatives); glikr is now obsolete, and even in very old MSS. of the 13th or even the 12th century both forms, glikr and likr, glikendi and likendi, glikjast and likjast, occur indiscriminately; but in older poems gl is the only form. β. gn in gnadd, gnaga, gnauda, gnegg, gneisti, gnipa, gnista, gnolla, gnógr, gnúa, gnúpr, gnyðr, gnæðingr, gnólra, gnötra (q. v.), and some poet. words, as gnat, etc. But in mod. usage, in gn and gl, the g is dropped both in spelling and pronunciation, nadd, naga, nauda, hnegg, neisti, nipa . . . núpr, nyðr or níðr, næðingr, nólra, nötra; the gn in these words is almost constantly used in very old MSS., but even at the end of the 13th and in the 14th century the MSS., e. g. Hb., begin to drop the g, vide p. 206 sqq.: the exceptions are few, e. g. Icel. never say nýja for gnýja, but the word itself, although known, is almost obsolete; so also in modern writers gnótt and gnægtr (abundance) often occur: but the sound gn may be said to be almost extinct. The Danes, Swedes, and Norse still keep the g before n, e. g. Dan. gnav, Swed. gnaga; whereas in glikr the g has been dropped, and the word has become in Swed. lik, etc.; in Dan. lig, lige, ligning, etc. II. in two Icel. words the prefixed g has hardened into a radical consonant, so that its proper sound is no longer perceived, viz. granni (and compds), a neighbour, prop. one of the next house, Goth. garazna = γάρων, qs. g-ranni, from rann, domus; and greiða, explicare, = Goth. garaidan. The Scandinavian tongues have furthermore done away with the Saxon and German prefix to passive participles, and no trace of them remains even in the earliest writers or poems. The modern English has followed the same law as the Scandinavian in gn, for though it still appears in Engl. words (as gnaw, gnash), it is hardly sounded. The participial prefix remained long in southern England (see Morris's Specimens), but weakened into y or i till at last it dropped altogether.

B. PRONUNCIATION.—It is sounded hard, soft, or aspirate; hard, as in Engl. gate, gold; soft, as in Swed. dag, Germ. tag, or mod. Gr. γ, but lost in Engl.; aspirate also lost in Engl. I. hard, 1. as initial before a hard vowel, garðr, gull, gott, etc.; and before a consonant, gláðr, gráta; but the prefixed g, in the instances A. I. above, was prob. always sounded soft. 2. as final after consonants, as sorg, belg, ung, höfgr, or if double, as in egg. II. soft, never as initial (unlike mod. Greek, in which γ is sounded soft throughout), but only as final or sometimes as medial: 1. if single after a vowel, as dag, hug, log, veg, stig. 2. between two vowels if the latter is hard, lega, ligum, vega, vegum, dögum; but in case both the vowels, or even only the last, are soft (an i vowel) the g sound is lost, and it is eliminated altogether or assimilated to the preceding vowel, which thus becomes a diphthong; the same is the case if j follows g; thus syllables and words such as bagi and bæi, dagi and dæi, degi and deigi, eygia and eyja or eya, lagi and lægi or læi are all sounded alike; in olden times there must have been a difference of sound, as old MSS. never confound the spelling in words like those above, whereas in modern letters written by uneducated people, nothing is more frequent than to see, um ðæinn for um daginn, or á ðæinum for á deginum, and the like; the poets also rhyme accordingly, e. g. segi—hneigi, Pass. 38. 13; segja—deyja, 25; segja—beygja, 25. 12; drygja—nyja, 30. 3; eigið—dregið, 7. 10; deyja—teygja, 16. 13, etc.; even MSS. of the end of the 15th century frequently give seigja for segja (to say), e. g. Arna-Magn. 556 A. see the pref. to Ísl. ii. p. vi: as a medial, before d the g is sounded hard almost all over Icel., and the d soft (sagði); yet in the peninsula of Snæfells Sýsla many people still reverse this rule, and say sagdi, lagdi, bygdi, bygð, sounding the g soft but the d hard; in the east of Icel. people say bregða, sagði, pronouncing gð both soft; this is no doubt the best pronunciation, and accords well with the modern English said, laid, and the like. III. the aspirate g is sounded, 1. as initial before a soft vowel or j, gefa, gæta, geyma, geir, gjöld. 2. as final, a double g (gg) or g after a consonant is sounded as aspirate in all instances where a single g is lost (vide above), thus laggir, leggja, byggja, byggji, veggir, or margin, helgir, göfgr, engi, mergjar, elgjar, engja. Between two consonants the g is pronounced, thus fylgdi, morgna, fylgsni, bóligna are sounded as morna, fylsni, bólnar.

C. SPELLING.—Here is little to notice: I. in old MSS. aspirate g as initial is frequently marked by the insertion of i after th thus giæta, giefa, = gæta, gefa, but this is not now used. Old Norse MSS.,—and, by way of imitation, in some Icel.,—the s before a vowel is frequently marked by inserting b after it, thus deghi, vegha, sagha; in the Middle Ages many foreign MSS. express sounds in this way, and so they wrote db = ð, gb = soft g, tb = p, w comes the th in modern English; we also find gb in words su Helghi, Fb. pref.; probably the g was in olden times sounded soft lg, which agrees with the change in English into boly, sorrow, ngb = ng also occurs, e. g. erlinghi, Fb. i. 537, denoting a soft so ng as in modern Danish and Swedish. In MSS. we now and then spurious g before j and a vowel, e. g. deygja, meygja, for deyja, because the sound was the same in both cases.

D. CHANGES.—The hard and aspirate g, especially as initial, u remains in modern foreign languages, gate, ghost, give, get, exc. Engl. yard, yarn (Icel. garð, garn), etc., where the Anglo-Saxon had g sound. Again, 1. the soft g after a vowel takes a vowel s and is in English marked by w, y, or the like, day, say, saw, law, way, low, = Icel. dag, segja, sög, lög, bogi, veg, læg, etc.: and double g, as in lay, buy, = Icel. leggja or liggja, byggja. 2. s before or after a consonant, thus, Engl. said, rain, gain, sail, tail, fowl, etc., = Icel. sagði, regn, gagn, segl, tagl, hagl, fugl; Engl. so follow, follow, worry, borrow, belly, = Icel. sorg, fylgja, félagi, vargr, belgr. In Dan. lov, skov, vej answer to Icel. lög, skóg, veg, whereas S and Norway have kept the g, Swed. lag, skog, våg.

E. INTERCHANGE.—Lat. b and Gr. χ answer to Icel. and Gr. g but the instances of such interchange are few, e. g. Lat. hostis, lomo, boedus, beri, = Icel. gestr, garðr, gumi, geit, gær; Lat. br χάος, cp. Icel. gjá, gina; Gr. χθές = gær; χῆν = gáss, χολή = gall, e. TR, m., gen. gests; pl. gestir, acc. gesti; [Ulf. gasts = ξέφος; st; Engl. guest; Germ. gast; Dan. gjæst; Swed. gäst; Lat. I. a guest; the original meaning of this word is a guest, alien, cp. Lat. hostis. B. the Guests, one division of the king's men; the Guests were a kind of policemen, and had not the full privileges of the king's guardsmen or hirdmenn, although they were in the king's pay; they had their own seats in the king's hall, the guests' bench, gesta-bekkr, m., Fb. i. 347; their own chief, gesta-höfðingi, a, m., Nj. 7, Hkr. ii. 69, Fms. vii. 35; their own banner, gesta-merki, n., Fms. ix. 489; their own meeting, gesta-stefna, u, f., Fms. viii. 250; they formed a separate body, gesta-sveit, f., Fas. i. 318; skulu þar fylgja hirdmenn ok gestir, Ó. N. G. L. in the section Hirds-skrá, or the law (rules) for the king's men, and Sks. 257 sqq. As the gestir were lower in rank than the hirdmenn, a recruit had often to serve his apprenticeship among them, e. g. var hanu í gesta-sæti, he was seated among the guests, i. e. was held in small repute, Fas. i. 51.

II. a stranger, guest, Lat. hospes, but keeping the old notion of a stranger, prop. an accidental guest, chance comer, and is distinguished from boðs-maðr, an invited guest, or the like; hence the allit. phrase, gestr ok gangandi, a guest and ganger, since with the ancients the poor had to go from house to house (cp. gangleri); this is to be borne in mind, if one would understand old sayings such as, Guð elr gesti, God feeds guests, Bs. i. 247; or many passages in the old heathen poem Háva-mál, e. g. örir gestr við gest, guest quarrels with guest, Hm. 31; gestr at gest hæðium, guest mocking guest, 30, which reminds one of Hom. Od. xviii. 1-33; gest þú né geyja né á grind hrekir (scoff not at a guest, nor drive him to the door), get þú váluðum vel, Hm. 136, where gestr (a guest) and válaðr (a vagrant) are used synonymously; ganga skal, skala gestr vera æ í einum stað, 34. In olden times there were no public hosterlies, and all entertainment was (as it still is in Icel.) private bounty; a fine instance of a munificent hostess of the heathen age is recorded in Landn.—Geirriðr sparði ekki mat við menn, ok lét göra skála sinn of þjóðbraut þvera, hún sat á stóli ok laðaði úti gesti, en boð stóð inni jafnan ok matr á, 2. 13. After the introduction of Christianity, when churches were built and endowments given, the donors often imposed the duty of 'feeding guest and ganger for a night' (ala gest ok ganganda), Dipl. i. 169, 174; or, þar er ekki gesta eldi skylt (it is not required to feed guests), ala hvern at ósekju er vill, 200; ala þurfa-menn ok þá er fara skylda-erinda, 201, cp. 273 passim:—gener. a visitor, guest: gesta-eldi, n. shelter for guests, D. I. (vide above): gesta-fluga, u, f. a guest-fly, a moth, Isl. þjóðs. i. 558: gesta-herbergi, n. a 'guest-barbour', hostel, inn, Gr. καταλύμα, Luke ii. 7: gesta-hús, n. a guest-room, Sturl. i. 216, ii. 191: gesta-koma, u, f., gesta-naud, n. a coming, crowding of guests: gesta-maðr, m. a guest-man (bishops had a special servant so called), Bs. i. 850, 876: gesta-rúm, n. a guest-bed: gesta-skáli, a, m. a guest-chamber, Hom. 36: gesta-spjót, n. pl., a cat is said to raise the 'guest-spears' when it lies on its back and cleans itself with its hind legs, which is a token that a stranger is at hand, Isl. þjóðs. i. 558.

III. as pr. names, Landn., freq.; also in compds, Þor-gestr, Heim-gestr, Goð-gestr, Hleva-gastir on the Golden horn (Bugge's reading), and Gr. Ξενο-φών, Ξενο-φώνης. Gest is a name of Odin = the Traveller, Edda, Vþn., Gm., Hervar. S. ch. 15 (Gestum-blindi). It is curious to notice that whereas with the Romans hostis came to mean a foe, with the Teutons (as with the Gr. ξένος) the equivalent word became a term of friendship, used of a friend staying at one's house. gest-risinn, adj. hospitable, Greg. 32, Bs. i. 101, 1 Tim. iii. 2, Tit. i. 8, 1 Pet. iv. 9, passim.

gest-risni, f. hospitality, 655 v. 2, Bs. i. 81, 830, Rom. xii. 13, Heb. xiii. 2, passim.

H. 85; eigi at heldr gat hann veitt þann ikorna, id.; ef ek get eigi fylgt yðr, Fms. vi. 211.

siliga, adv. enormously, Fas. i. 64. siligr, adj. enormous, Fas. ii. 243, Mar. 166, 423. singr, m. impetuousity, Finnþ. 354, Fas. i. 157, Ísl. ii. 347, Fms. xi. 81. sir, m. the name of a famous hot spring in Iceland. Foreign sirs often use geysir as an appellative; but the only Icel. words for hot sirs are hver (a cauldron, hot well) and laug (a hot bath). The preysir is never mentioned in old writers, and it seems from a record in Icel. Annals that the great hot wells in the neighbourhood of Haukavere due to the volcanic eruptions of 1204, when old hot springs seared and those now existing came up,—hjá Haukadal kómu upp stórir en sumir hurfu þeir er áðr höfðu verit; unfortunately the nc of Árna S. (the bishop), the sole historical work of that time, is lost. word geysir = a gusher must be old, as the inflexive -ir is hardly used obsolete words (lækir a leach, hellir a cave, etc., are exceptional), probably borrowed from some older hot spring. A pretty legend, ng to the 'moving' of springs when defiled with innocent blood, is ed in Ísl. Þjóðs. ii. 112, 113; this tale could not have sprung up ed a change in the place of the hot springs had been observed.

gilan, f. gluttony, Róm. 306, (an ἄπ. λεγ.)

(-or -ki after t or s), a particle suffixed to nouns and adverbs. A. In a positive sense [Lat. -que], ever, Lat. -que, -cumque: 1. with onoun hverr (quis) in nearly all cases, answering to the Lat. quis-que: the Laws we can nearly make a full paradigm:—nom. hverr-gi or gi, Lat. quis-que, qui-cumque, Grág. Kb. i. 61 (twice): gen. hvars-kis (cuius-que), 238: dat. -gi (cui-que), 31, 156: acc. masc. hvern-gi (quem-que), 147, 155, 225, 245, ii. 47, 66: abl. hve-gi or hvi-gi, however, i. 147, 195, ii. 41, 128, 151, Jóns. v. 14:—plur. acc. neut. hver-gi (quae-que): dual ng, hvárum-gi megin, on both sides (of a river), Grág. Kb. ii. 93: on in historical prose, því at hit næsta sumar gat hvergi ber á Íslandi, lowing summer every man gathered berries in Iceland (to make some of wine), Bs. i. 135, (or are we to read hvar-gi, everywhere?). 2. with adverbs; hvert-ki (quocum-que modo), Grág. ii. 50; *nær-gi, when-*vi-cumque, i. 191; hvar-gi, wherever, 25, 166, 240, ii. 128, 212. 3. In a negative sense, with a few pronouns, adjectives, adverbs, rely in old poems with substantives: 1. with nouns, in the pr. Lopt-ki, an ἄπ. λεγ., Ls. 19: with appellatives, þórf-gi, no need, an ἄπ. λεγ., Hkv. Hjölv. 39; freq. in mann-gi, no man, cp. Lat. nemo, Íb., which is even used in mod. writers and poets; væt-ki, naught; vettu-gi (dat.) and vetter-gis (gen.), Vsp.: with adjectives, ein-gi (q. v.), none, a common word; otherwise rare, sjálf-gi, 'self-not', i. e. not oneself, Ls. 29, an ἄπ. λεγ.: with a dat. case of langr, þá löngu-gi, then not for a long time, Konr. (MS.): with pronouns, in the dual, hvárr-gi, neither, Lat. neuter, Grág. Kb. i. 46, ii. 93, 151; gen. hvárs-kis (neutrius), freq.; dat. hvárun-gi (neutri), i. 215; hvárum-gi, ii. 63; neut. hváru-gi, 216; hitt-ki, ne illud quidem, Hm. 21, 23; þat-ki, Hbl. 6; þat-ki at ek fía (not even that I get) mála minn falslausan, Mork. 83. 2. with adverbs, only in poetry or laws or very old prose; svá-gi, not so, Grág. Kb. ii. 99, Mork. 83; þá-gi, then not; þey-gi, though not, qs. þó-gi; áva-gi, never: again, hver-gi (q. v.), nouwere; ei-gi (q. v.), not; aldri-gi (q. v.), never; hver-ki (q. v.), neither, are common words in prose and in speech. The negative -gi can never be suffixed to verbs (vide 'at, p. 2); therefore þýð-gi, non jubeo (in Íslands-vaka 61, a poem of the last century, Fél. i. 236), is a spurious imitation of the old idiom; neither can -at be put to nouns; ráð-at hann kunni, Jónas 105, ought therefore to be ráð hann kunni-t, issue he knew not.

C. In an indefinite sense; in a few instances -gi seems to be used almost like Latin quidem with a preceding negative; eigi miklo-gi minna, ne multo quidem minus, Heiðar. S., Ísl. ii. 360; eigi stóru-gi meiri, ne multo quidem majora, 386; engi miklo-gi görr... nemo multo quidem plus... Grág. i. 209; cp. also the adverbs öllum-gis or öldun-gis, quite, altogether (allr, -gi); einun-gis, only, solely (einn, -gi), both formed from dat. sing.: the obsolete vel-gi (qs. vel-gi) is ambiguous, being used both in a neg. sense = not well, and posit. = well, bene quidem, cp. Bs. i. 393, note; Hm. 66, málu-gi, is doubtful;—prob. þyrftig-at málu-gi mat should be read, -at being taken not as a prep. but as a negative verbal suffix, and -gi as a positive suffix; Icel. now say, hann á ekki málu-gi matar, he does not know where to look for his next meal.

ḡ. The negative -gi is peculiar to Scandinv., and no traces of it are found in any Saxon nor German idioms; whereas, as a positive suffix, it is common to all Teutonic tongues, and remains in the Engl. many and any; 'many' being qs. man-y = man-ever, 'homo-cumque', Goth. manags, and 'any' qs. ane-y = every-one; so is the g in Icel. margr and hvárrigr, which are remnants—the former of the positive, the latter of the negative -gi.

gift, gífta, u, f. gift, vide gípt, gípta. GIKKR, m., pl. ir, [Dan. gjæk = jester], a pert, rude person. COMPS: gikkis-háttir, m. pert manner. gikkis-lígr, adj. fert, rude; the saying, hver sem glettist við gikkinn fær af honum hnykkinn, who meddles with a 'gik' will get a kick.

GILL, n., gen. pl. gilja, dat. giljum, [Gbyll or Gill in North. E. and Scot. local names]:—a deep narrow glen with a stream at bottom, like the Gr. χαράδρα; brooks and tributary streams flowing through clefts in the fell side to the main river at the bottom of a vale are in Icel. called gil; very freq. in local names, Ísfrðinga-gil, Branda-gil, Hauka-gil, Hrafná-gil, Hellra-gil, Gilj-á, Þver-gil, vide Landn.; (a chasm without water or with stagnant water is not gil, but gjá; also gljúfr, a deep chasm forming the bed of a river), Valla L. 223, Hrafn. 7, Eg. 766, Ld. 218, Krók. 64, Fms. vii. 149, passim. COMPS: Gils-bakki, a, m., prop. Gill-bank, a local name, Landn., whence Gils-bekkingar, m. pl. the name of a family, Landn. gils-botn, m. a gill bottom, Sturl. i. 82, 84. gils-gjá, f. a chasm with a gill (rare), Grett. III. gils-þróm, f. the edge of a gill, Ld. 218, Dropl. 23, Grett. III.

gilda, t, to be worth so and so, only in mod. usage, esp. in metaph. and impers. phrases, mig gildir einu, I do not mind; láttu þig einu g., never mind: hvað sem gildir, at any price; hirt aldrei hvað sem gildir, at hættu á ósatt mál, Pass. 13. 2.

Dan. gilde; so called from the fee paid?], Eg. 20 sqq., Edda 45, 57, Fb. i. 283, Gþl. 178, freq. in old poems; the poetical mead is called Gauta g., Kormak; or gildi Grjótdaldr, the cheer of the Giants; gefa illfum gildi, to feast the wolves, Lex. Poët.; to this seems to belong the passage in Vsp. 27, hvárt skyldi Þesir afrað gjalda eðr skyldi goðin öll gildi eiga, where the eiga gildi means to hold a feast, with the notion of making a league or peaceful agreement, as opp. to gjalda afrað (q. v.), to pay tribute as a badge of submission.

GJÓTA, pret. gaut, pl. gatu; pres. gytr; pret. subj. gyti; part. gotinn; [Ulf. gjutan; A. S. geotan; O. H. G. giuzan; Germ. giessen; Dan. gy; Swed. giuta = to cast (of metal), but this sense is not found in the Ice.—to drop, throw, cast one's young, with dat.; Icel. say kefa or ka (kálfur), of a cow, whale, deer; kasta, of a mare; kæpa, of a seal (ka a young seal); hrygna, of a fish; gjóta, of a cat, dog, fox, mouse, of a fish, to spawn; whence gota, spawn; got-rauf, q. v.; þá gjóta þ hrognum sinum, Sks. 46; nýgotiun hvölpur, a new-dropped cub (d kitten).

2. in the phrase, gjóta augum, to twinkle, Fas. iii. 41; gjóta hornauga, to look askant.—That gjóta was originally used in a nobler sense may be inferred from the fact that the names of two Teutonic people, the Gautar (Gauts) and Gotar (Gotbs, = the born, Lat. nati) in all likelihood derived from the same root.

gjóta, u, f. [Dan. gyde], a narrow lane.

GJÖF, f., gen. gjafar, pl. gjafir, later gjafir; dat. gjöfum; [Ulf. gi; A. S. gifu, geofu; Engl. gift; Germ. gabe, whence mod. Swed. gå; Dan. gave, and Icel. gjafa]:—a gift, Nj. 7, 163, Eg. 33, Fms. i. 296, 105, x. 47, Bs. i. 76, 143, N. G. L. i. 8, passim; in mod. usage Icel. distinguish between gjöf and gáfa, using the latter of the gifts of nature, gifts of mind, cleverness, but gjöf in a material sense. The ancients v fond of exchanging gifts, which were either a part of hospitality or token of friendship; the former were munificent, the latter might be small, l 51: at a feast (wedding, funeral, or the like) the host used to make s to all his more honoured guests at departure; the technical phrase this was, leysa menn út með gjöfum, to dismiss with gifts; vóru menn með gjöfum brott leystir; hence útlasnr, departure from a feast, Sturl. iii. 268: a departing friend or visitor had to be dismissed with a gift (kynnis-gjöf, Fms. vi. 358). The gifts consisted chiefly of weapons and costly clothes; but favourite gifts were a steed (Bj. 55, 58) or oxen of a fine breed (Sturl. i. 106), hawks, tents, s, white bears (Ó. H. ch. 114, Fms. vi. ch. 72-75, 100, Hung. ch. 2) a short anything that was rare and costly, görsimi, metfé. Again, friends had to exchange gifts, so as to cement their friendship, cp. Hávað passim,—vápnum ok váðum skulu vinir gleðjask; gefendr ok endrgef er erusk lengst vinir, 40; gjalda gjöf við gjöf, 41; geði skaltú við þu (viz. the friend) blanda ok gjöfum skipta, 43; glík skulu gjöld gjöu, 45; sýtir æ glöggur við gjöfum, 47. Gifts were obligatory, and were token of grace and goodwill on the part of giver and receiver. A gift when received was called the 'nautr' of the giver, e. g. a ring or sword presented by a king was konungs-nautr. The instances in the S are very many, e. g. Eg. ch. 36, 81, Ld. ch. 7, 27, 43, 45, Sturl. passim, Glúm. ch. 6, 25, Vápn. p. 19, Hrafn. 23, Lv. ch. 14, 15, Ó. H. ch. 14, Har. S. Gilla ch. 16, Hung. ch. 13, 17, Páls. S. ch. 16, and last, not least, the curious Gautr. S.; the remark of Tacit. Germ. ch. 21, gauti muneribus, sed nec data imputant nec acceptis obligantur, is only partly true; ást-gjafar, love-gifts; vin-gjafar, friend-gifts, cp. Gr. έτίμα, ch. 125; huf-gjafar, a fatal gift; Jóna-gjöf, a Yule present, Eg. ch. 1; sumar-gjafir, summer-gifts, on the day when summer begins. GLER, n. [A. S. glæs; Engl. glass; Germ. glass; early Dan. glar; the mod. Dan. and Swed. glas seem to be borrowed from Germ.; Icel. distinguish between glér (glass) and glas (a small glass bottle); but s seems to be the original consonant, and the word is akin to Glásir, glys, glæsa, q. v.]—the word originally meant amber, 'succinum' quod ipsi (viz. the Germans) glæsium vocant. Tacit. Germ. ch. 45; glass beads for ornament are of early use; quantities are found in the great deposits (in cairns and fens) of the earliest Iron Age, but only in a single instance in a deposit of the Brass Age (which ends about the beginning of our era), vide Ann. for Nord. Oldk. 1868, p. 118; and such is the sense of the word in the three places that it occurs in old heathen poems: magical Runes were written on glass, Sdm. 17; metaph., nú er grjótt þat at gleri orðit, now those stones are turned into glér, of an altar 'glassed' with sacrificial blood, Hd. 5; cp. also the curious reading, bresta í gleri, to be shivered, to break into shivers, Hým. 29,—the reading of Kb., 'í trau,' is a gloss on the obsolete phrase:—glas also occurs twice or thrice in A. S. poetry, but not in the oldest, as Beowulf, vide Grein. For window-panes glass is of much later date, and came into use with the building of cathedrals: a Danish cathedral with glass panes is mentioned in Knyttl. S. ch. 58 (year 1085); in Icel. the first panes brought into the country were probably those presented by bishop Paul to the cathedral at Skalholt in the year 1105; the ancient halls and dwellings had no windows in the walls, but were lighted by louvres and by round openings (gluggur) in the roof, covered with the caul (of a new-born calf, called skjall or líkna-belgr) stretched on a frame or a hoop and called skjár: these are still used in Icel. farms; and Icel. distinguish between the round small caul windows (skjár or skjá-gluggar) and glass windows (gluggar):—háll sem gler, slippery as glass, of ice, Nj. 144: in eccl. and later writings, Hom. 127, Sks. 424, Vm. 21, Fas. iii. 393: in the saying, sjaldan brýtr gæfu-maðr gler. The earliest match recorded is that of Thor and the giantess Elli (Age),—for the tale vide Ísl. 336; freq. in the Sagas, Sturl. iii. 20, 268; glenz ok glímur, Fms. i. 9 sqq., 182, iii. 187, 188, Grett. and Finn., Kjaln. passim, Eg. ch. 4. leikr (sport) and glíma are often used synonymously, as Ld. ch. 4.

The glíma was a popular game at any meeting or festival, where many young and active men met together: thus at the banquet in Rkhólar (1119) the guests amused themselves by dancing, glímur, and story-telling, Sturl. i. 23; at the parliament (alþing) there was a pestra, Fanga-brekkka ('wrestling-brink') in Glúm. ch. 13 a fight is recorded between the Northerners and Westerners assembled there; as in Grett. ch. 75 (in the parliament at Hegranes); in Gunnl. ch. 11 the crew of the ships in harbour made up a glíma. The mod. Icel. glíma-gíma is just the same, as it was practiced in the college at Hólar, later in the school at Bessastaðir, as also at fishing-stations and wherever young men came together; the young men are divided by lot into parties, which are then drawn up in a row, each having their leader or bóndi' (whence the name); the bændr pair off their men against one another to wrestle in the arena or defile between the two ranks, one after another; if the one side was weaker in number, or the one bóndi had all his men, he might challenge his antagonist, and their match decided the game, Eggert Ítin. ch. 518. The bænda-glíma at college and school was by far the best-played, and much stress was laid on nimble and useful movements.

GNÝGR, adj., mod. nægr, = gnógr; þú hefir þat nægðara, er meira þarf við, Lv. 43; því at lands-fólkít var gnægt til, i. e. populous, Hkr. i. 45; hann á nægri börm en kýr, he is better stocked with bairns than kine, Bs. ii. 141; skaupi gnegr, full of contempt, scoffing, Að. 2.

GNÝGT, f. (nægt, nægð, Stj. 235, freq. in mod. usage), = gnótt, abundance: esp. in pl., eiga alls nægtir, to have one's fill of all good things, freq.

GNÝGTA, t. = gnægja; Dróttinn mun þik g. öllum göðum hlutum, Stj. 421. GNÖLLRA, a. d. (nöllra, Karl. l. c.); hence the mod. nöllra to grumble, nöldr grumbling:—to howl, bark; hundrinn hljöp upp gnöllrandi, Fas. iii. 545; haukar þeirra gnöllraðu, Karl. 376, v. l.: við þessi ord spratt hundrinn upp ok gnöllraði hátt, Fms. iii. 13; hjarta hans gnöllraði í honum innan-brjósts eins og greyhundr, rendering of Od. xx. 13, 14; þar eru tveir hundar ok nöllra þeir ok grenja, Þiðr. 245.

GNÖLIRAN, f. bowling, Mar. GNÖTRA, að, [gnat], to clatter, rattle; gnótrar (gnóttir, Verel.) sverðit hvárt yfir annat, Bret. 55; menn þóttusk heyrð at beinin gnótruðu við hræringarnar, bis bones clattered, Bs. i. 69; esp. of the teeth, skelfr hann svá mjök at gnótrar í honum hver tönn, Háv. 54; tenur hans nötruðu, Fbr. 149; metaph., þar hlaut at nötra um, Sd. 169:—in mod. usage freq. to shiver, shake, as with cold.

GÖÐ, n. pl. [all the Teutonic languages have this word in common; Ulf. guþa, n. pl., Gal. iv. 8; guda, id., John x. 34, 35; and Guþ, m.; A. S. godu, n. pl., and God, m.; O. H. G. Cot: in mod. languages masc.; Engl. God; Germ. Gott; Dan.-Swed. Gud].

A. HISTORICAL REMARKS.—In heathen times this word was neuter, and was used almost exclusively in plur., as were also other words denoting Godhead, e. g. regin or rögn=numina, q. v.; and bönd, höpt, prop. = bonds, and metaph. gods!—this plur. usage seems not to refer to a plurality of gods, but rather, as the Hebrew אלהים to the majesty and mystery of the Godhead; it points to an earlier and purer faith than that which was current in the later ages of the Scandinavian heathendom; thus the old religious poem Völuspá distinguishes a twofold order of gods,—the heavenly powers (regin or ginn-heilög goð) who had no special names or attributes, and who ruled the world, like the Μοῖρα or Αἴσα of Gr. mythology;—and the common gods who were divided into two tribes, Æsir (Aeses) and Vanir, whose conflict and league are recorded in Vsp. 27, 28, and Edda 47.

II. After the introduction of Christianity, the masculine gender (as in Greek and Latin) superseded the neuter in all Teutonic languages, first in Gothic, then in Old High German and Anglo-Saxon, and lastly in the Scandinavian languages; but neither in Gothic nor in Icel. did the word ever take the masc. inflexive r or s, so that it remains almost unique in form. The 2. in Scandinavian the root vowel was altered from o to u (goð to gud), [Swed.-Dan. gud], yet in old poems of the Christian age it is still made to rhyme with o, Gods, boðnum; God, roðnar, Sighvat; as also in the oldest MSS. of the 12th century; sometimes however it is written gþ, in which case the root vowel cannot be discerned. 3. in Icel. the pronunciation also underwent a change, and the g in Guð (God) is now pronounced gw (Gwuð), both in the single word and in those proper names which have become Christian, e. g. Guðmundr pronounced Gwuðmundr, whence the abbreviated form Gvendr or Gvöndr. The old form with o is still retained in obsolete words, as goði, goðorð, vide below, and in local names from the heathen age, as Goð-dalir; so also Gormr (q. v.), which is contracted from Goð-ormr not Guð-ormr. On the other hand, the Saxon and German have kept the root vowel o.

III. in old poems of heathen times it was almost always used without the article; gremdu eigi goð at þér, Ls.; ádr vér heilög goð blótum, Fas. i. (in a verse); ginnheilög Goð, Vsp. passim; goðum ek þat þakka, Am. 53; með goðum, Alm.; in prose, en goð hefnia eigi alls þegar, Nj. 132.

2. with the article goð-in, Vsp. 27: freq. in prose, um hvat reiddusk goðin þá er hér brann hraunit er nú stöndu vér á, Bs. i. (Kr. S.) 22; eigi eru undr at goðin reiðisk tölum slíkum, id.; Hallfræðr lastaði eigi goðin, þó aðrir menn hallmælti þeim, Fms. ii. 52; allmikin hug leggur þú á goðin, Fs. 94; eigi munu goðin þessu valda, Nj. 132, passim.

3. very seldom in sing., and only if applied to a single goddess or the like, as Öndor-goðs (gen.), Haustl. 7; Vana-goð, of Freyja, Edda; enu skirleita goði, of the Sun, Gm. 39.

IV. after the introduction of Christianity, the neut. was only used of false gods in sing. as well as in pl., Sólar-goð = Apollo, Orrostu-goð = Mars, Drauma-goð = Morpheus, Bret. (Verel.); and was held up for execration by the missionaries; gör þik eigi svá djarfa, at þú kallar goð hinn hásta konung er ek trúi á, Fb. i. 371. Yet so strongly did the neut. gender cleave to the popular mind that it remains (Grág. Kb. i. 192) in the oath formula, goð gramt = God gramr; and Icel. still say, i Guðanna (pl.) bænnum. 2. guðir, masc. pl., as in A. S. gudás, is freq. in eccl. writers, but borrowed from the eccl. Lat.

(App.) 126* new Ed. (from the Hauks-bók), that men of the olden time used to call their sons and daughters after the gods (Goð-, Þór-, Frey-, Ás-); and it was thought that a double (i. e. a compound) name gave luck and long life, esp. those compounded with the names of gods; menn höfðu mjök þá tvau nöfn, þótti þat líkast til langliffs ok heilla, þótt nokkurir fyrirmælti þeim við goðin, þá mundi þat ekki saka, ef þeir ætti eitt nafn, though any one cursed them by the gods it would not hurt if they had 'one' name, i. e. if they were the namesakes of the gods, Eb. l. c.;—we read 'eitt nafn' for 'citt annat nafn' of the Ed. and MS. In Fb. i. 23, the mythical king Raum is said to have had three sons, Alf, Björn, and Brand; the first was reared by the Finns, and called Finn-Alf; Björn by his mother (a giantess), and called Jötun-Björn; and Brand was given to the gods, and called Goð-Brand (Guð-brandr, whence Guðbrands-dalir, a county in Norway); cp. also Eb. ch. 7.

For the Christian sense of God and its compds vide s. v. Guð. goddi, a, m. [cp. Germ. götze], a nickname, Ld. GOÐI, a, m. [Ulf. renders τεπεύς by gudja (ufar-gudja, abumista-gudja, etc.), iepareta by gudjinassus, iepareveiv by gudjinön; an Icel. gyði, g gyðja, would answer better to the Goth. form, but it never occurs, except that the fem. gyðja = goddess and priestess points not to goði, but to masc. with a suppressed final i, gyði; a word coiting occurs in O. H. glossaries, prob. meaning the same; and the form gupi twice occurs Danish-Runic stones in Nura-gupi and Saulva-gupi, explained as goði P. G. Thorsen, Danske Runem.; (Rafn's explanation and reading Nura-gupi qs. norð á Gauði, is scarcely right): with this exception word is nowhere recorded till it appears in Icel., where it got a v. historical bearing]:—prop. a priest, sacerdos, and hence a liege-lord chief of the Icel. Commonwealth.

A. HISTORICAL REMARKS.—The Norse chiefs who settled in I. finding the country uninhabited, solemnly took possession of the l. (land-nám, q. v.); and in order to found a community they temple, and called themselves by the name of goði or hof-goði, 'temple-priest,' and thus the temple became the nucleus of the new community which was called goðorð, n.:—hence hof-goði, temple-priest, and hingi, chief, became-synonymous, vide Eb. passim. Many independent goðar and goðorð sprang up all through the country, until about year 930 the alþingi (q. v.) was erected, where all the petty sovereign chiefs (goðar) entered into a kind of league, and laid the foundation of a general government for the whole island. In 964 A. D. the constitution was finally settled, the number of goðorð being fixed at three in the þing (sbire), and three þing in each of the three other quarters, (but in the north); thus the number of goðar came to be nominally thirty-nine, really thirty-six, as the four in the north were only reckoned three, vide Íb. ch. 5. On the introduction of Christianity the goðar lost their priestly character, but kept the name; and the new bishops obtained seats in the Lögretta (vide biskup). About the year 1100 there were created new goðar (and goðorð), who had to elect just to the Fifth Court, but they had no seats in the Lögretta, and that time the law distinguishes between for (old) and ný (new) goðar—in Glúm. ch. I the word form is an anachronism. It is curious, especially in the 12th century, the goðar used to take the lesser offices from political reasons, in order to resist the Romish clergy, who claimed the right of forbidding laymen to be lords of churches or to deal with church matters; thus the great chief Jón Loftsson was a sub-dean at last, about 1185, the archbishop of Norway forbade the bishop of Icel. to ordain any holder of a goðorð, unless they first gave up their goðorð, fyrir því bjóðum vér biskupum at vígja eigi þá menn er goðhafa, D. I. i. 291. In the middle of the 13th century the king of Norway induced the goðar to hand their power over to him, and thus the union with Norway was finally brought about in the year 1262; since that time, by the introduction of new codes (1272 and 1281), the name and dignity of goðar and goðorð disappeared altogether, so that the beginns and ends with the Commonwealth.

B. DUTIES.—In the alþingi the goðar were invested with the réttu-skipan (q. v.), that is to say, they composed the Lögretta the Legislative consisting of forty-eight members—on the irregularity of the number vide Jb. ch. 5), and were the lawgivers of the country; secondly, they had the dómféna (q. v.), or right of naming the men who were to sit in the courts, vide dómr:—as to their duties in the quarter-meetings (vár-þing) vide Grág. þ. þ. and the Sagas. The authority of the goðar over their liegemen at home was in olden times somewhat archaic, vide e. g. the curious passage in Hænsþ. S. ch. 2; though section of law relating to this interesting part of the old history is not recorded, we can glean much information from the Sagas. It is to be borne in mind that the goðar of the Saga time (10th century) and those of the Grágás and Sturlunga time (12th and 13th centuries) were very different; the former were a kind of sovereign chiefs, who of free will entered into a league; the latter had become officials, who for neglecting their duties in parliament might be fined, and even forfeit the goðorð to their liegemen, vide Grág. þ. þ. Neither þing (q. v.) nor goðorð was ever strictly geographical (such is the opinion of Konrad Maurer), but changed from time to time; the very word goðorð is defined as 'power' (veldi), and was not subject to the payment of tithe, K. þ. K. 142. The goðorð could be parcelled out by inheritance or by sale; or they might, as the case in the latter years of the Commonwealth, accumulate in one hand, vide esp. Sturl. passim, and Grág. The liegemen (þingmenn) were fully free to change their lords (ganga í lög með goða, ganga ór lög með goði), every franklin (þingmaðr) had in parliament to declare his þingfest to name his liegship, and say to what goði and þing he belonged; the goði had to acknowledge him; so that a powerful or skillful liegman might have liegemen scattered all over the country. But the goðar were bound to the courts and the right of sitting in the legislative body always bound to the old names, as fixed by the settlement of the year 964; and any one who sought the name or influence of a goði had (by purchase, inheritance, or otherwise) to become possessor of a goðorð of one of the old traditional goðorð; see the interesting chapter Þ. 11. The three goðar in one þing (sbire) were called sam-goðar, joint-goðar, for the sense of allsherjar-goði vide p. 17.

C. NAMES.—Sometimes a chief's name referred to the god whom especially worshipped, as Freys-Góði, Hrafn., Gísl., whence Freyslingar, q. v.; (the úr-góði is dubious); more frequently the name referred to the liegeman or county, e. g. Ljósveitinga-Góði, Tungu-Góði, ; but in the Saga time, góði was often added to the name almost a cognomen, and with some, as Snorri, it became a part of their name (Cato Censor in Latin); hann varðveitti þá hof, var hann þá laðr Snorri Góði, Eb. 42; seg, at sú sendi, er meiri vin var húsfreyjar at Fróða en Goðans at Helgafelli, 322. Góða-lyrttr, m. a law term, a protest or interdict, Grág. i. 112, ii. 97, passim; but it is uncertain whether it is derived from góði, i. e. the protest of a góði, or from góð, i. e. the great ban, a protest in the holy name of the gods. Poët.; Gota-veldi, n. the Gothic empire, (of the island Gotland, A. D. 1319.) The name of the Gotbs with compds occurs freq. in Scand. history, esp. in Sagas referring to the mythical age; and distinction is made between Ey-Gotar, the Island-Gotbs, i. e. the inhabitants of the Danish Isles, and Reið-Gotar or Hreð-Gotar in the south of Sweden. According to Jormandes and the late Norwegian historian P. A. Munch, a race of Gothic origin, speaking a dialect closely akin to that of Ulfilas, lived in parts of Scandinavia during the 3rd and 4th centuries of our era; Munch even supposes that Ermanarik (Jörmunrekr) was a Scandinavian-Gothic king, and lived in the 4th century, and that the Runic monuments on the Golden horn, the stone in Tune, the Bracteates, etc., are of this and the subsequent period; on this interesting question see Munch's Norske Folk's Hist., vol. i, and several essays by the same. II. poet. a horse, Lex. Gullfjörð, gold feather, gold quill, name of an eccl. code; or Hryggjar-stykki, a kind of duck, but also the name of a book. 2. in later times (in the 16th century) the name Grágás was applied to an old MS. of Icel. laws of the Commonwealth time, the present Cod. Arna-Magn. 134 folio, or Sb., and has since been made to serve as a collective name for all Icel. laws framed before the union with Norway, sometimes including, sometimes excluding the eccl. law (Kristinna-laga þátt = K. þ. K.); the whole matter is fully treated by Maurer, s. v. 'Graagaas,' in Ersch and Gruber's Encyclopedia; he makes out that the Icel. of the Commonwealth, although they had written laws, had no code, and that the passage in Íb. ch. 10 does not refer to codification, but to the committal of oral laws to writing; the two vellum MSS., the Kb. and Sb., are merely private collections of the 13th century, and differ very much one from the other. Upon the union with Norway, Iceland was for the first time blessed with a code, which they called Ironside (Js.); and a second code, the Jon's Book, was introduced A. A. Though the primitive form Goð rhymes with boð (bidding), (help), and many other words, the second form Guð rhymes with no other word, so that in hymns the poets are wont to use incomplete rhymes, as brauð (bread), nauð (need); and exact rhymes can only be used by the last syllables of derivatives, e. g. Íðranin blíðkar aptur | ei verður syndin tilreiknuð, Pass. 40. 4; or Upphaf alls mesta nauds | áklögur ströng og reiði Guðs, 3. 14; Svo er nú syndin inn- | iðrandi sála kvitt við Guð, 50. 14; but these rhyme-syllables only occur in trisyllabic words (Gramm. p. xv):—the following are examples of incomplete rhymes, Vinir þér enga veittu stað | svo þú þar fengi eg við sannan Guð, Pass. 3. 7; Föðurlegt hjarta hefir | við hvern sem lífr kross og nauð, 3. 16; Herra minni þú varst | Guð | þá hæðni leiðst og krossins nauð, 40. 16; as also in the ny, Til þín Heilagi Herra Guð | hef eg lypt sálu minni | af hug og þjá | í hverri neyð | hjástóð freystandi þinni, Hólabók 108, rendering ps. xxv; Luther's hymn, Ein feste burg ist unser Goð, is in the Icel. ering, Óvinnanlig borg er vor Guð | ágæta skjöldur og verja | hann er oss af allri nauð, Hólabók 182; Fyrir valtinn veraldar auð | set trú á sannan Guð | sem allt skapaði fyrir sitt boð, 208 (in Hans þá hymn); hugsjúkir eta harma brauð | hollari fæðu gefr Guð | sér þín þá þeir sofa, 124, Ps. cxvii. 2.

guða, að, to shout 'God'; in Icel. it is the custom for a stranger arriving at a house at night after 'day-set' (dagset, q. v.), instead of knocking at the door, to climb to the louvre and shout, hér sé Guð, God be here! this is called að guða; the dialogue is well given in a ditty of Stefán Ólafsson, Hott, hott og hæ! Hér sé Guð í bæ! sælt fólkíð allt! mér er sárkalt.—Svörðu heima-hjú, Hvað heitir þú?—Eg heiti Jón, Jóhanns þjón, etc.; or in another ditty, Hér sé Guð á góðum bæ | gestr er á ljóra | andsvörin eg engin fær | ekki vaknar þóra; or Guðað er nú á glugga | góðvinn komium er, Jónas 119.

The word was in Icel. borrowed from English missionaries, and Icel. remains the only Scand. country where the Evangel is called Gospel; Danes, Swedes, and Norsemen, as well as Germans, use the Greek word. This was a favourite way of settlement at the time of the Commonwealth, and suited well the sagacious and law-abiding spirit of the men of old: nor did the institution of the Fifth Court make any change in this; the görd was even resorted to in public matters, such as the introduction of Christianity in A. D. 1000. Good and leading men acted the part of public peacemakers (e. g. Njál in the 10th, Jón Loptsson in the 12th century); until at last, in the 13th century, the king of Norway was resorted to, but he misused the confidence put in him.

H

(há) is the eighth letter. In the old Runic alphabet it was represented by N and H, which are used indiscriminately (but never H or N): N and H both occur on the Golden horn, the former once, the latter twice. This Rune was no doubt borrowed from the Greek or Latin. In the later common Runic alphabet this character was replaced by * (arely *), which we may infer was taken from the Greek χ (the g of the old Runic alphabet) marked with a perpendicular stroke down the middle, rather than from the Latin X (see Ritschl's essay in the Rheinisches Museum, 1869, p. 22); yet the old form H is now and then found on the best of the later monuments, e.g. the stones from Suodelöv, Hjöjetop, and Helnæs (Thorsen 15, 17, 335), on which monuments the * is used for a: in some inscriptions * serves both for b and soft g. The name of the Rune b was Hagall or Hagl, an Anglo-Saxon form, explained as meaning bail, hagl er kaldast korna (bail is the coldest of zins), in the Norse Runic poem; cp. bägl byð hwitust corna in the Anglo-Saxon poem, which is the prototype of the Norse. These names of the Anglo-Saxon and Norse poems are in no way derived from the name of the Rune, but are merely alike to the modern rhymes in English 3 C books,—B is a Baker' or the like. The Hagall was the first of the second group of Runes, H n i a s, which was therefore called Hagals—the family of Hagal (cp. introduction to F).

A. PRONUNCIATION AND SPELLING.—H is sounded as in English ad. house: the aspirate is still sounded in bl, br, bn much as in the English ll, rb: the bv is in the west and north of Icel. sounded as kv; but in the south and east the distinction is kept between bv and kv (hver a kettle a kver a quire, hvölum ubales and kvölum torments), as also in the English; and bv is sounded like vb in Northern English; in a small part of eastern Icel. it is sounded like Greek χ (hvalr as χalr, hvað as χa), and this is probably the oldest and truest representation of the bv.

II. the b is dropped, I. in the article inn, in, it, for inn, hin, hit, which is often spelt so in old MSS. β. in the personal pronoun hann, hún if following after another word, e.g. ef 'ann (ef hann), ein (ef hún), þó 'onum (þó honum), látit 'ann vera (látú hann vera), sý 'enn' að koma (segðu henni að koma); this is the constant pronunciation of the present time, but in writing the b is kept: whereas, the beginning of a sentence the b is sounded, e.g. hann (hón) kom, þe (came), but kom 'ann? (if asking the question). γ. in a few words as álfa and hálf, óst and hóst (cp. hósta), ökulbrækr and hökulbrækr.

2. in the latter part of such compounds as have nearly become monosyllabic, as ein-arðr for ein-hardr: in -að, -yðgi, -ygd (Gramm. p. xxxiii, c. 1); elsk-ogi, var-ugi, öl-ogi, from hugr; örv-endr, tröll-endr, grammr, from hendr; litar-apt = litar-hapt: in -ald = hald, handar-ald, haf-ald; blumr = lík-hamr, hár-amr = hár-hamr; skauf-ali, rang-ali, from hali; at-hæfi, and perhaps in auð-æfi, ör-æfi, from hóf or hœfi; and -æfa = and-hœfa, to respond; hnapp-elda = hnapp-helda: in pr. names in -arr, -eidr, -ildr, for -harr = herr, -halli, -heidr, -hildir, (Ein-arr, Þór-ali, Ein-eidr, Yngv-ildr, etc.) In a few words, as hjúpr, and derivatives like júpr, hilmr and ilmr, hopa and opa, b seems to have been added. In some of the cases above cited both forms are still heard, but the apocope are more usual.

III. b is neither written nor sounded in initial or medial, and has in all such cases been absorbed by the preceding vowel or simply dropped (see Gramm. p. xxx, col. 1). IV. In some MSS., especially Norse, use a double form gb and tb to mark a soft or aspirate sound, e.g. sagha and saga, thing and þing; especially in inflexive syllables, -itb = -it, etc.

V. A curious instance of gb (as in Welsh) rb for br is found occasionally in Runes, e.g. Roulfir for Hrúlfir, Thorsen 335; to this corresponds the English þing vb for br, in white, ubeat, wbale, wbere, wbence, wby, wbelp, wbe, wbet, wbirl, wbarf, wbeel, wbile, wbim, = Icel. hvítir, hveiti, hvalr, hváðan, hvé, hválp, hvína, hvetja, hvirfill, hvarf, hvel, hvilid, hva, etc.

B. REMARKS, CHANGES, ETC.—In Icel. b is used as an initial letter not largely next to s; in modern Teutonic languages it has been greatly reduced through the dropping of the aspirate before the liquids l, n, r, and before v, whereby all words in bl, bn, br, and bv have been transferred to the liquids and to v (see Gramm. p. xxxvi, signif. II. β); the b in these words is essential to the etymology, and was in olden times common to all Teutonic languages, but in Scandinavia it was lost about the 11th or 12th century, so that not a single instance of bl, bn, br is on record in any MS. written in Norway; though old Norse poets of the 10th century used it in alliteration, so it must have been sounded at that time; b in bl, bn, br is therefore a test of a being Icelandic and not Norse. In modern Icel. pronunciation the b has been lost in two or three words, as leiti for hleyti, a part, ard which was borrowed from Norway about the 14th century; rót = ót, a roof: it is a matter of course that the b is dropped in words which were borrowed from the English not earlier than the 12th century, lárarðr, Early Engl. lauerd (lord), but A. S. bláford. II. the b has been added in a few words to which it does not rightly belong, viz. in hneiss and hneisa for neiss and neisa; hnýsa for nýsa; hreifr (glad) for reifr; hniðra (to lower) for niðra (niðr); hlykkir (and hlykkjótr), a curve, for lykkir (cp. lykkja, a noose); hrjóta for rjóta, to snort; hlað, a lace, cp. Lat. laqueus; hnestla for nestla, a loop. β. in a few instances both forms are used to form double words, in hrifa and rifa, Lat. rapere; hrasa and rasa, to stumble; rata (= Goth. uraton), to find the way, but hrata, to fall (cp. Vsp. 52); hrjá and rjá, to vex.

2. the b seems to be a substitute, a. for an old v, in hrekja, to toss about, to wreck, akin to Goth. urekan, Icel. reka; in hreidri, a nest, Dan. rede, cp. Engl. wreath, Goth. vriþus. β. in modern pronunciation b is a substitute for g in the words hneggja, hnegg, for gneggja, gnegg; þver-hnipt for þver-gnipt. γ. for k in hnifr, hnúi, hnefi, hnöttir, hnútr, hnútr, hnútr, hnjúkr, hnjúkr, hnúð, hnappr, for knifr, knúi, knefi . . . , knóða, knappr; this spelling is found in MSS. of the 15th century, e.g. the Hrokkinskinnu passim (see letter K). In all these cases the b is etymologically wrong; in some of the words above (as in hneisa) it is found even in very old MSS., e.g. the Mork.; but the true etymology is seen from the alliteration in old poems, e.g. Hm. 48, 140, Hdm. 26 (raut, reinkunni); Stor. 13 (Nýsmuk lins | ok hygg at því); Edda 105 (reifr gókk herr und hlifar | hizig . . .); but not so in modern poets, e.g. Hrókta því svo og hrjáðu þig | Herra mínu ilmu þjóðir, Pass. 9. 9; Forvitnin holdsins hnýsir þrátt | i Herrans leyndar-dóma, 21. 2; Nær eg fell eðr hrasa hér | hæstur Drottinn vill reidast mér, 5. 6.

III. the Gothic has a special sign for bv, viz. w, which thus answers to wb in English, e.g. wan = wben. 2. when followed by an o or u, the v in bv is dropped, e.g. hót booting, hóta to boot, cp. Goth. wota and wotjan; as also in hót = hvat wbat, höll from hváll, hjól and hvel, hólf and hválf, horfinn, hurfu, hyfri for hvorfinn, hvurfu, hyvri.

G. The word hafa is in the Icel., as in other Teut. languages, used as an auxiliary verb with a part. pass. of another verb, whereby a compound preterite and pluperfect are formed as follows: I. in transitive verbs with acc. the participle also was put in acc., agreeing in gender, number, and case with the objective noun or pronoun; this seems to have been a fixed rule in the earliest time, and is used so in all old poems down at least to the middle of the 11th century, to the time of Sighvat (circ. A. D. 990-1040), who constantly used the old form,—átt is an apostrophe for áttá in the verse Ó. H. 81:

2. references from prose; this old form has sin been turned into an indecl. neut. sing. part. -it. The old form was f lost in the strong verbs and the weak verbs of the first conjugatic in the earliest prose both forms are used, although the indecl. is m freq. even in the prose writers, as Íb., the Heidarv. S., the Mirac book in Bs., Njálá, Ó. H., (Thorodd seems only to use the old for as may be seen from the following references, Björn hafði særða þ meunn, Nj. 262; hann mundi hana hafa gipta honum, 47; hann ha þá leidda saman hestana, 264: ek hefi sendan mann, Ísl. (Heidarv. ii. 333; ek hefi senda menn, id.; hafa son sinn ör helju heimt Bs. (Miracle-book) i. 337; en er þeir höfðu niðr settan sveini 349; hann hafði veidda fimn tegu fiska, 350; er þér hefir neisu görva, Ó. H. 107: þá hefi ek fyrri setta þá í stafrófi, Ská (Thorodd) 161; þar hefi ek við görva þessa staf fjóra, id.; hafa h samsettan, 167: góða fylgd hefir þú mér veitta, Þorst Síðu H. sagði, at Ólafir konungr hafði sendan hann, Bs. i. 11: Þyri, er hert hafði festa nauðga, Fms. x. 393 (Ágrip): hefi ek þá svá signaða magnaða, v. 230: hefir sólin gengna tvá hluti, en einn únginginn, K. þ. 92 (Lund's Syntax, p. 12).

β. again, neut. indecl., hana hafði átt í þoróddr, Ísl. ii. 192: hón hafði heimt húskarl sinn . . . Ísl. (Heidarv. ii. 339; hann hefir ekki svá vel gyrt hest minn, 340; hefir þú eigi mik, 341; hve hann hafði lokkat hann, id.; gistingar hefi ek yðr fen, 343; þeir höfðu haft úfríð ok orrustu, Íb. 12; hann hafði tekið lög 14: stafr er átt hafði þorlárk, Bs. (Miracle-book) i. 340; er þér hö upp tekið ketilinn ok hafit . . . 342; göngu e hann hafði gingit, 3. e sleggjuna hafði niðr felt, 346; sem maðr hefði nýssett (hana) n id.; jartein þá er hann þóttisk fingit hafa, 347; hafði prestrinn f fram sveininn, 349: hjálm er Hreiðmarr hafði átt, Edda 73: hafa e sína heitstrenging, Fms. (Jónsv. S.) xi. 141: slíkan dóm sem hann h mér hugat, Ó. H. 176, etc. passim.—at last the inflexion disappea altogether, and so at the present time the indecl. neut. sing. is used throu out; yet it remains in peculiar instances, e. g. konu hefi eg mér festa, L xiv. 20, cp. Vidal. ii. 21. ¶ This use of the inflexive part. pass. n often serve as a test of the age of a poem, e. g. that Sólárhjóð was c posed at a later date may thus be seen from verses 27, 64, 72, 73, 75; but this test is to be applied with caution, as the MSS. have in some c changed the true forms (-inn, -ann, and -it, -an being freq. abbrevia in the MSS. so as to render the reading dubious). In many cases the form is no doubt to be restored, e. g. in vegit to veginn, Fm. 4, 23; l to búinn, Hkv. Hjörv. 15; borit to borinn, Hkv. i. 1; beðit to beði Fsm. 48; orðit to orðin, Og. 23; roðit to roðinn, Em. 5; brotið brotinn, Bkv. 24, etc.: but are we to infer from Ls. 23, 26, 33, that poem is of a comparatively late age?

II. the indecl. neut. si is, both in the earliest poems and down to the present day, used in following cases: 1. with trans. verbs requiring the dat. or gen.; hefi fengit e-s, hann hafði fengit konu; hafa hefnt e-s, Fms. xi. 25; er hafði beðit sjár, Þkv. 32; stillir hefir stefnt mér, Hkv. Hjörv. 33, so in endless cases. 2. in the reflex. part. pass.; þeir (hann) f (hefir) látisk, farisk, sagsk, etc. 3. in part. of intrans. neut. ve e. g. þeir þær (hann, hón), hafa (hefir) setið, staðið, gengit, legit, f komit, verit, orðit, lifað, dáit, heitið . . . also almost in every line b of prose and poetry. 4. in trans. verbs with a neut. sing. in ob tive case the difference cannot be seen.

¶ The compound preterite is common to both the Romance- Teutonic languages, and seems to be older in the former than in latter; Grimm suggests that it originated with the French, and the spread to the Teutons. That it was not natural to the latter is sh by the facts, that α. no traces of it are found in Gothic, nor the earliest Old High German glossaries to Latin words. β. in east Scandinavian poetry we can trace its passage from declinable to undecidable. y. remains are left in poetry of a primitive uncomounded preterite infinitive, e.g. stóðu = hafa staðit, mundu, skyldu, vildu, see Gramm. p. xxv, col. 2. We may here note a curious dropping of the verb hefir, at ek em kominn hingat til lands, ok verit (having been) langa hríð utan-lands, Ó. H. 31, cp. Am. 52; barni at til, en vegit slíka hefju sem þorvaldr var, Glúm, 382. On this interesting matter see Grimm's remarks in his Gramim. iv. 146 sqq.

7. In some instances the use of dat. and acc. wavers, e. g. halda húsum, to keep up the houses, Grág. ii. 278, 335; h. hlíði, to keep the gate in repair, 265; but halda hlíð (acc.), 332; to keep, observe, h. lögum, gríðum, boðorðum, Glúm. 333, Grág. i. 357, ii. 166, 623, 28; hélt hann þessu sumu, Fms. x. 416 (Agrip); halda illa orðum, vii. In most of these instances the acc. is the correct case, and the dat. is due either to careless transcribers or incorrect speaking; in some instances an enclitic um has been taken for a dative inflexion, thus e. g. sáttum haldi in Stor. l. c. is to be restored to sátt um haldi; eiðum haldi in Bkv. l. c. to eið (for eiða) um haldit; in others the prep. um has caused the confusion, as 'halda njósn um at' has been changed into halda njósnum at. But in the main the distinction between the use of dat. and acc. is fixed even at the present time: the acc. seems to represent the more primitive usage of this verb, the dat. the secondary.

hamask, ad, dep. to rage, to be taken by a fit of fury in a fight, synonymous to ganga berserks-gang (see p. 61): the word is derived from hamr, prob. owing to a belief that such persons were possessed by a strange spirit or demon; cp. hamr, hamstoli, hamramr, all of them words referring to a change of shape:—svá er sagt, at þá hamaðisk hann, ok fleiri vóru þeir föru-nautar hans er þá hömuðusk, Eg. 122; hamask þú nú, Skallagrinn, at syni þínum, 102; Þórir hljóp þá af baki, ok er svá sagt, at hann hamaðisk þá it fyrsta sinn, Gullþ. 30, Fas. iii. 343, Landn. 119; Fránmarr jarl hafði hamask í arnar líki, Sæm. 95: the word is still used, to work as hard as a giant.

hamingja, u. f. luck, fortune; prop. in a personal sense, a guardian spirit, answering to the guardian angel of Christians; derived from hamr, for the guardian spirits of men—and every man had his hamingja—were believed to take the shape sometimes of animals, sometimes and more commonly of human beings, esp. that of women; but they were themselves supernatural beings; that the hamingjur were giant-females proceeding from the great Norns—who were the hamingjur of the world—is borne out by the passage in Vþm. 48, 49. Hamingja and fylgja or fylgju-kona (Hallfred S. ch. 11) seem to be nearly synonymous, as also gæfa, gipta, auðna, heill; but hamingja is the most personal word, and was almost symbolical of family relationship. At the hour of death the hamingja left the dying person and passed into a dear son, daughter, or beloved kinsman; cp. Hallfr. S. ch. 11, and esp. the charming tale in Glúm. ch. 9. One might also impart one's own good luck to another, hence the phrase leggja sína hamingju með e-m, almost answering to the Christian, 'to give one's blessing to another.' Examples: sögðusk mundu leggja til með honum hamingju sína, Ld. 74; h. ok gæfa, Fms. v. 165; þú en ústöðuga h., Al. 23; h. konungsins, 22; ok mun kona sjá hans h. vera er fjöllum hærta gékk, Glúm. 345; etja hamingju við e-n, Fb. ii. 65; ok reyna hvat hamingjan vill unna þér, Fs. 4; vilnask (bope) at h. mun fylgja, 23; vera má at þat sé til h. várrar ættar, 11; langælígar nytjar munu menn hafa hans hamingju, Bs. i. 229; forlög ekki forðumst ill | fram kemr það hamingjan vill, Úlf. 3. 69; meiri í hreysti en hamingju, Gullþ. 21; sigri eðr hamingju manns þessa, Fs. 10. It is still used in Icel. almost as Heaven, Providence; það má Hamingjan vita, God knows; eg vildi Hamingjan græta, would to Heaven! Guð og Hamingjan, God and Good Luck; greyfa Guði og Hamingjunni; eiga undir Hamingjunni, to run the risk; and in similar phrases.

C. 66. γ. to hang up, for smoking; eða tvau lær hængi, Hm. 66; hanginn, bung, smoked; hangið kjöt (proncd. hangi-kjöt), bung, smoked meat.

2. to be hanged, executed; annarr skyldi hanga, en steypa í forsin Sarp, Fms. vii. 181; at eigi væri hverr yðvarr mætt at hanga, 13; gengir þú at hanga, Am. 22, cp. Hm. 139, Fms. v. 21.

hangri, a, m. a law term, a body hanging on a gallows, Fms. v. 21; mythol. phrase, sitja, setjask undir hanga, to sit under a gallows, of him in order to acquire wisdom or knowledge of the future;—for this stition see Yngl. S. ch. 7;—whence Odin is called hanga-guð, handröttinn, hanga-týr, the god or lord of the hanged, Edda i. 49. Lex. Poët.; varðat ek fróðr und forsum | fór ek aldrægi at gölu . . . nam ek eigi Yggjar feng und hanga, I became not wise under the falls, I never dealt in witchcraft, I did not get the share of Odin the poetical gift under the gallows, i. e. I am no adept in poetry. 3 (MS., left out in the printed edition). According to another it seems, a truer and older myth, Odin himself was represented as hanging on the tree Ygg-drasil, and from the depths beneath tak the hidden mystery of wisdom, Hm. 139; so it is possible that his names refer to that; cp. also the curious tale of the blind ta Grimm's Märchen, No. 107, which recalls to mind the heathen the one-eyed Odin sitting under the gallows.

hangi-kjöt, n. bung, smoked meat.

hangin-lukla, u, f. epithet of a housewife whose keys hang belt, Rm.

hangr, m. a bank, coil; það er hangr á því, there is a coil (diff.) in the matter.

HANI, a, m. [Ulf. bana; A.S. bana; Engl. ben; Hel. banu; Germ. ban; Dan. and Swed. bane; cp. Lat. cano].—a cock, Fms. v. 193, 194, 34, 35; passim; veðr-hani or vind-hani, a weathercock; Óðins-hani, a kind of sandpiper, tringa minima; Þórs-hani; Óðinshani and Óðinshani are distinguished, Þjóðólfr, May 15, 1869, p. 124. 2. as a nickname, Fms. xii, Fb. iii, Landn.; whence in local names, Hana-Þór, Hana-fótr, etc., Landn. COMPS: hana-gal, n. or hana-an, f. cock-crow, gallicinium, Fms. viii. 56. hana-ötta, u, f. cock-crow, N. G. L. i. 9.

HANN, pers. pron. masc. he; fem. HÓN or HÚN, sbe; for the pronunciation of this word see introduction to letter H; as to the inflexion Gramm. p. xxi; in the MSS. the word is usually abbreviated h = hann; h = hön; h = hún; h = hánun; h = hennar; h or he = henni: the old dat. h = hánun, as shewn by rhymes, mána vegr und hánun, Haustl.; in Icel. it was no doubt sounded hánun, by way ofumlaut; it was then added hönun with a long vowel, and lastly hönium with a short vowel, which also is the mod. form; the old MSS. often spell hánun in full; spelling hönun in old printed books recalls the old form hánun; from Fms. i. 9, 7 it may be seen that in the middle of the 17th century the dative sounded precisely as at present. 2. sing. fem. hón (bo in mod. use, boo in Lancashire) seems to be the older form; the MSS. use both hón and hún, but the former is the usual one; it was prob. sounded hón, which again points to a long root vowel, hánun, hánua? [cp. Ulf. Germ. er; A.S., Engl., and Hel. be; old Fris. bi; in the Scandin. dialects with a suffixed demonstrative particle, vide Gramm. p. xxviii; Dan. and Swed. han, bun, etc.]

B. As this word appears almost in every line only special usages are to be mentioned, as, ef maðr færir ómaga fram ok berir fé undir hann (acc., sc. ómaga), eðr eigi hann (nom., the same) fé, þú skal hann (nom., sc. maðr) beiða hann (acc., sc. ómaga) með vátta, at hann (nom., the same) seli hánun (dat., sc. maðr) fjár-heimting á hönd þeim mönnum minn (nom., sc. ómaga) á fé undir, Grág. i. 279; here the context is perplexing, chiefly owing to the identity of acc. and nom. sing. masc., but also because the pron. is sometimes demonstr., sometimes reflexive; in the latter case an Icel. would now say sér instead of hánun: so also, þú skal hann beiða samþingis-góða, at hann fái honum (i. e. síðr) manni, 1. again, skal hann selja sókn ok vörn ef hann vill, ok svá varð-lu fjár síns þess er hann á hér eptir, 146; þú skal hún ráða við frænda síns (ber) nokkurs, 307; Gunnarr kenndi féit at þat var hama sem hann (i. e. Njal) hafði honum (i. e. to Gunnarr) greitt, N. 56.

II. The pers. pron. is often prefixed to a pr. name, as a sign of familiarity; farit upp til hestsins ok gætið hans Kols, Nj. 5; eðr hverr maðr er hann Gunnarr, what sort of a man is Gunnarr? ok hleypr á hann þorkel upp, 114; ok leitirð er at honum Höskuldi, and look after Hoskuld, 171; sæmd er ek veitta honum Þórólfri bróður þinn, Eg. 112; segir hann Pálmir, Fms. xi. 47; hún Ingibjörg, 49; þu Gíslr, Grett. (in a verse); ok berjask við hann Ólaf, Fagrsk. 86; h. Vigólf, Sól.; svá er, segir hann Þórdr, Ísl. ii. 329;—this has become v. freq. in mod. conversational usage, so that a person (nay, even an animal or a ship that has a name) is scarcely ever named without the pron., bl'ann Jón að koma, segð' onum Jóni, vekt' ana Sigríði; hún Sigga lí, hann Jón lítli, etc.; or of ponies, sakt' ann Brún, legð' á hana Skjónu; the dialogue in Ísl. Þjóðs. i. 612,—ég skal fylla mína hit, segir 'ún hit, ég ét sem ég þoli, segir 'ann boli, etc.; or Kvöldv. ii. 197,—taktú þu frá 'emni Reyðr ok gefð' emni Hyrnu, hún Húfa hefir flækt sig í ubandinu.

H. 16.

hannörð or hannyrð, f., esp. used in pl. and sounded hannyrðir; [the word is formed from hannr or hannarr in the same way as einörð or eðrð from einarðr]:—bandiness, skill, fine work, esp. used of ladies' needlework, embroidery, or the like, and freq. in mod. usage; enda er hannörð (skill, beauty) á hviðvetna því er þú tækr þínun höndum til at gá, Clem. 24; hannörðir (pl.), 25; svá skyldi hans kona bera af öllum konum hannyrðir sem hún var hverri þeirra fríðari, Vigl. 48 new Ed.; kúll gillfönn ok gerr hannyrðum, hannyrð vefnaðar, Konr. ts; the phrase, haptænis heid, the atoning fee of the gods = poetry, ng, in a verse of Kormak, seems to refer to the tale in Edda 47 (Skálda-par-mál, ch. 3); whence heid-fé, n. a fee, stipend, Edda (Gl.): heid-muðr, m. an epithet of a king: heid-gjöf, f. a gift of fee: heid-naðr, part. paid, granted in fee, N. G. L. i. 91: heid-maðr, m. a heidr, a beath, one who lives on beaths and wildernesses, Edda (Gl.), Akv.

8; it occurs besides twice or thrice in poems of the time of king Harald Harðráði, 11th century.

heidingligr, adj. beaten, Fms. i. 137, passim.
HEIÐINN, adj. [A. S. bæden; Engl. beaten; O. H. G. beidan; Germ. beide and beidnisch; Dan. bedensk; this word is prob. derived not from heidr, a beath, but from Gr. ἐθνικός as used in the N. T.; Ulf. in a single passage, Mark vii. 26, renders γυνή Ἑλληνική by gino bailno; it is even possible that the eccl. paganus, which, according to Du Cange, only appears after A. D. 365, may be merely a translation of the Teutonic word under the notion that bailan was derived from bailpi = a beath, open country (Gr. ἀγρός, Lat. pagus): then, as bailpi was pronounced much like éthvos, the true etymology of heidinn was lost; and so the long vowel and the aspirated initial may be accounted for. To the worshippers of Thor and Odin the name beathen was unknown; Christians were the first that used the word, and we meet with it first in Hkm. of Eyvind, who speaks of heidin god, beathen gods; heidinn stallr, a beathen altar, Kristni S., by the missionary Þorvald, A. D. 982; it is also used by Hallfrid and Sighvat; heidinn dómr, beatendom, Sighvat; heidnar stjörnur, beathen stars, Sól.: the verse in Ísl. ii. 50 is spurious (as are all the verses of that Saga); so also the verses in Landn. 84 (Hb.), and in Bergþúá-báttur, where the word heidinn is put into the mouth of a ghost and a giant, in songs which are merely a poetical fiction of later times. The word heidingi for wolf is curious; probably it is merely a metaph. phrase from heidinn, gentilis, and if so, it gives an additional evidence to the age of the poem Atla-kviða; which poem, from its nickname the 'Greenlandish,' cannot be older than the discovery of Greenland, A. D. 985:—beathen, gentilis, ethnicus, the Sagas passim, esp. Nj. ch. 101–106, Kristni S., Ó. T., Ó. H., etc.: a child not christened was in olden times called heathen, N. G. L. i. 340; heidit morð, the murder of an infant not christened, 339: in mod. Icel. usage, a boy or girl before confirmation is called heathen; this improper use of the word is caused by a confusion between baptism and confirmation: so in Norway a woman between child-birth and churching is called heathen (Ivar Aasen).

B. To fling, throw, with dat.; it seems not to occur in old writers, (for in Anal. 193 the original vellum Fb. iii. 405 reads hann 'skýtr'); but freq. in mod. usage, hann sveiflaði honum (the stone) í kring og henti, Od. ix. 538; thus tvihenda, to burl with both hands: reflex., hendask, to throw oneself forward, rush forward, to dart; hendast ór háa lopti.

Dan. bændelse = a chance, hap.

II. metric. rhymes; the ancient double rhymes were both placed in the same line, so as to 'catch' one another: distinction is made between an adal-henda (a full rhyme) and a skot-henda (a half rhyme), thus in Fastorðr skylji fyrða | fengsæll vera þengill,—'orð fyrð' are half rhymes, 'feng þeng' full rhymes; the first rhyming syllable in the verse (as orð feng) was called from-hending, head-rhyme, the second (as fyrð þeng) viðr-hending, after-rhyme; if the head-rhyme (as feng in the second verse line above) was placed as the initial syllable it was called odd-hending, edge-rhyme; if in the middle (as orð in the first line), blut-hending, chance-rhyme, see Edda (Ht.) 121, Skálda 178; the phrase jafn-láfar hendingar refers to the final consonants, Fms. vi. 386, Skálda 190: end rhymes, as in mod. poetry, were called Rún-henda (or Rím-henda?), but they are extremely rare in old poets: alternate end rhymes began to appear in the Rímur or Rhapsodies of the 14th century, and since that time in hymns. β. verses gener.; nætli hann (Ódin) allt hendingum, HERAÐ or hierat, n., pl. hérað or hérað, spelt hierof in the vellum, C. 9, 673 A. 53, and in O. H. L. Cod. Upsal. herað, see p. 113: hérað is undoubtedly derived from herr (A. S. here), a host, and not from here; the long vowel (é) is prob. caused by the characteristic j in her- (-); so that hierað (hérað), through the after effect of the i sound, is for heriað; cp. Dan. herred, Swed. bürad: the Old Engl. and law term beriot may also be connected with the Scandin. word, in which case the original sense of hérað might be a tax to be paid to the king in lieu of military service: the inflex. -að is derived from aodr, as has been suggested by the old commentators, e. g. Björn á Ísá]:—a county, district: 1. in Sweden esp. the word had and has a fixed legal sense, county, jurisdiction, or the like, cp. Swed. is-böfing = justice of peace, bärad-ting = assize, bärad-fogde = sheriff: so in local names, e. g. Dan. Tby-berred in Jutland, Kvænna-hera, Vetta-h., in Norway, Hälfs S., Fb. iii. 2. in Norway hera, country, was usually opp. to bær, town, and answers to Icel. sveit in mod. usage; i bæ ok í héraði, D. N. iii. 35, 101; hérað eðr kaup-lands, Fms. vii. 187; í héraði né í kaupangi, N. G. L. ii. 39; allt þat er í heri er górt þá skal þat at kaupangs-rétti sækja, en allt þat er í heri er górt millum héraðs-manna ok bíar-manna, þá skal þat allt at her-rétti sækja, N. G. L. ii. 88 and passim; ef maðr á hús í kaupangi en í héraði, id.; cp. héraðs-dómur, -höldur, -kirkja, -menn, -prestr, -þing, etc., below. 3. in Icel. the sense varies, but is for the most part merely geographical, a district, valley, fjord, country, as ordered by mountains or within the same river-basin; thus the Skagafjörð, Eyja-fjörðr are each a hérað, and the former is specially so called, her, Sturl. passim, Grett. 153 (hann sendi þegar eptir mönnum upp í héraði); whence Héraðs-vötn, n. pl. Herad water, a river of that country, Landn.; so Fjótisdals-hérað, in the east of Icel. Hrafn, 2, 3; heri ríðu ó héraði, Sturl. iii. 158; ef maðr ríður um fjöll þau er vatn-illir af á millum héraða, Grág. (Kb.) ii. 61, 65; í héraði því (dale) er herja-dalr heitir, Sturl. i. 130. Þ. genur. a neighbourhood; Gunnarrinn héraðit at bjóða mönnum, Nj. 49. 4. generally a district; Sjóð eru stór herd mörg, Hkr. i. 5; í héraði því er Mesopotamia ei. 623, 52; farlæg heruð, Fms. x. 374; sam-héraðs, within the same district; utan-héraðs, outside the district; innan-h., inside, passim; í öllum um Gyðinga, 626 C. 9; í héraði því er á Fjóni heitir, Fms. xi. 43; herja-hérað, Campania-h., Cappadokia-h., Post., etc.

as Fr. sire, Engl. sir, see the Sagas passim:

I. as a title; in A. D.

1277 knights and barons were created in Norway, to whom the title of herra was given; Herra Rafn, Herra Þorvarðr, Herra Sturla, etc., Árna S., Laur. S., Ann. passim: the bishops and abbots were also so styled, e. g. Herra Arngrímr (an abbot), Bs. ii. After the Reformation, herra became an integral part of the style of bishops, as Sira of priests, Herra Guðbrandr, Herra Þorlúkr, Herra Oddr, etc., and can only be applied to the Christian name; cp. the ditty in which the old woman addresses the bishop by Sira, and is rebuked for her rudeness, Sælir verid þér, Sira minn, | sagða eg við Biskupium; | ansaði mér þú þá apr hinn, | þú áttir að kall' 'ann Herra þinn. In mod. usage Herra is often applied to any person whatever, but only in writing; for in conversation the Icel. has no equivalent to the Engl. Mr. or Germ. Herr, and a person is simply addressed by his name or other title, Sira if a clergyman, and the like. In the N. T. dróttinn, herra, and lúvárðr (from Engl.) are used indiscriminately. II. HERSIR, m. [akin to hérað and herr], a chief, lord, the political name of the Norse chiefs of the earliest age, esp. before the time of Harold Fairhair and the settlement of Iceland: respecting the office and authority of the old hersar the records are scanty, as they chiefly belonged to the prehistorical time; they were probably not liegemen, but resembled the goðar (vide goði) of the old Icel. Commonwealth, being a kind of patriarchal and hereditary chiefs: in this matter the old Landnáma is our chief source of information;—Björn Buna hét hersir ágæt í Noregi, son Veðrar-Gríms hersis í Sogni, móðir Gríms var Hervör dóttir Þorgerðar Eylaugs-dóttur hersis ór Sogni, Landn. 39; Arinbjörn h. ór Fjörðum, 66; Ási h. 76, 303, and another of the same name, 109; Ketilr Veðr h. af Hringaríki, 94; Hrólfr h. af Ögðum, 48, 126; Ketilr Raumr hét h. ágæt í Raumsdal, 173; Gormr h. ágæt í Svíþjóð, 195; Grimr h., 204; Þorsteinn Höfði h. á Hörðalandi, 228; Þórir Hauknefr h., 237; Úlfr Gildir h. á Þelamörk, 292; Veðr-Ormr h., 314; Arinbjörn h., Eg., Ad. 3; Vigfúss h. af Vörs, Glúm.; Klyppr h. á Hörðalandi, Fb. i. 19; Dala-Guðbrandr h., Ó. Fb. i. 23; hersar hafa verið fyrri frændr minir, ok vil ek ekki bera herra nafn en þeir, Fms. i. 299: it is also prob. that by ágæt and göfugr (q. v.) the Landnáma means a hersir. At the time of Harold Fairhair the old hersar gradually became liegemen (lendir menn) and were ranked below a jarl (earl), but above a höldr (yeoman), the scale being konungr, jarl, hersir, höldr, búandi, see the record in Hkr. i. 80 (Har. S. Hárf. ch. 6), as also Edda 93; the name then becomes rare, except that hersir and lendr maðr are now and then used indiscriminately, heita þeir hersar eða lendir menn, Edda l. c. The old Norse hersar were no doubt the prototype of the barons of Normandy and Norman England. COMPS: hersis-heiti, n. the title of a h., Edda (Ht.) hersis-nafn, n. id., Fb. i. 23.

HIMINN, m. [the form hifinn occurs rarely, Fms. x. 10 (v. l.), Hb. (1866) thrice; the mod. form is himin, without the inflexive n; the root consonant varies between m and f (or v), the final between n and l, cp. Goth. himins, A. S. beofon, Engl. heaven, Hel. himil, O. H. G. bimila, Germ. as also mod. Dan. and Swed. bimmel; this interchange of f and m is analogous to 'of' and 'um' (umb), 'sofa' and 'sönn' (i. e. svefn), 'kufl' and 'kumb', Lat. sopio and somnus, etc. § 37. The mythol. Gimle (Vsp. 63) is probably dat. of an obsolete himil derived from the time when the initial h was still sounded gutturally]:—beaven; in the old heathen creed the heavenly vault was the skull of the giant Ymir, Gm. 40, Vpm. 21, Edda sub init.; and is called by the poets 'the giant's skull,' 'the burden of the dwarfs' (vide dvergr), etc.; the heavens were nine, the names of which are recorded in Edda (Gl.):—Niu eru himnar á hæð taldir, cp. HINN, HIN, HIT, the article, an enclitic, which therefore can never serve as an accented syllable in a verse, either as rhyme or in alliteration. In good old MSS. (e. g. Cod. Reg. of Sæm.) it is hardly ever spelt with the aspirate, but is written inn, in, it, or id, or enn, en, et or eð, and thus distinguished from the demonstr. pron. hin; but in the Editions the prob. spurious aspirate has been generally prefixed: an indecl. innu or hinu occurs often in later MSS. of the 14th century, e. g. the Fb. but as it has not been heard of since and is unknown in the modern language, it simply seems to be a Norwegianism, thus, innu sömu orð, Th. 2 hinna fyrri biskupa (gen. pl.), H. E. ii. 79; enu instu luti (res intimas) Hom. 57 (Norse MS.); hinu ágæztu meun (nom. pl.), id.; innu þær; dyra, 657 A. ii. 12: [cp. Goth. jains = ἐκείνος; A. Sivat; so also in prose passim.

B. When there was no adjective the article became a suffix to noun (see Gramm. pp. xix, xx), a usage common even in early poetry, but extremely rare in poetry; the reason is, not that the poems were composed before the suffixed article had come into use, but that metres themselves in which all the old poems were composed are other than that usage, and are not well adapted to it, so that the absence of the article became traditional. The old poem Harbarðsljóð makes an exception, no doubt not from being later than all other poems, but from being composed in a peculiar metre, half verse and half prose; thus in single poem alone there are nearly twenty instances, or about twice as many as in all the other poems together:—váginn, Hbl. 2, 13,
1. sundit, 1, 3, 8, 13; verðinum, 4; eikjunnii, 7; skipit, id.; stöðna, landit,
1. leiddina, 55; höfuðit, 15; bátinum, 53; veggins, stokksins, steinsins,
1. matrinn, 3; other solitary instances are, goðim úll, Vsp. 27 (prob.
of what corrupt); eiki-köstinn, Gh. 20; vömnun vár, Ls. 52.

II. In old and modern, the suffixed article occurs at every step; only or two instances are worth noticing as peculiar to the Icelandic: 1.
in a relative in addressing; konan, O woman! mjöðnanan, id., Sighvatr in a verse of A. D. 1018, and so in mod. usage); elskan! hjartað! heillin!

ástin, my love! dear! heart! þursinn! Fas. i. 385; hundarnir! = ð níves, Od. xxii. 35: also with another word, barnið gott, good child! Þrúðna-þussinn, thou monster giant! Miðgarðs-orrmíni! Fas. i. 373.

2. esp. if with a possessive adjective following, as in Gr. ὀυμός, τοῦμόν, τὰμά, etc.; elskan mín, ástin mín, hjartað mitt, göðrinn minn! hér er nú ástin min, here is my darling! Sturl. ii. 78, of a father presenting a darling child to a friend; and so in mod. usage: as abuse, hundrinn þinn, thou dog!
Ísl. ii. 176; þjófrinn þinn! Fms. vii. 127; dyðrillinn þinn! li. 279; hund-inum þínum! vi. 323: this use is not confined to the vocative, e. g. konan mín biðr að heilsa, my wife (kona mín is never used); maðrinn minn, my husband; biðdu foreldrana þína (ask thy parents) að lofa þér að fara; augun hans, his eyes, Pass. 24. 4; hugrinn vor og hjartað þitt, our mind and heart (cp. Gr. τῷ ἐμῷ θυμῷ), 43. 5: svo hjartað bæði og málið mitt | mikli samhuga nafnið þitt, 10. 7; gef þú að móður-málið mitt, 35. 9; bókin mín, my favourite book, my own book; as also, fábú mér hattinn minn, vetlingana mína, skóna mína, give me my hat, gloves, shoes; tungan í þér, augun í þér, thy tongue, thy eyes; höfuðið á mér, fætrnir á mér, my head, my feet; hendrnar á þér ('á mér, á þér' are here equivalent to a possessive, see p. 37, C. IV), thy hands, cp. Homer, τὰ ἐὰ γούνατα; hestana þína, Gr. ἵππους τοῦς σοῦς: similar is the instance, vömnun vár, the sins of ours, Ls. 52; this may be a remnant of a time when the article was used separately, even with an indefinite adjective.

3. a double article, one suffixed to the noun and the other prefixed to the word in apposition; hirðin sú in Danska, Fms. vi. 323; þau in stóru skipin, viii. 384 and passim: again, when a noun is put in the genitive after another noun the former has no article; as the Engl. phrase 'the fish of the sea and the fowl of the air' is in Icel. 'fiskar sjávarins og fuglar loptsins'; but this belongs to the syntax; see also Grimm's D. G. iv. 432.

C. SPECIAL CHANGES, in mod. usage: 1. The demonstr. pron. sá, sú, það has in speech generally taken the place of inn, in, it; thus, sá gamli maðr, sú gamla kona, það gamla skáld; sometimes the article is dropped altogether, e. g. á fimta degi, on the fifth day (= á enum fimta degi); á sómu stundu, in the same hour; even in old writers this is found, með sómu ætlan, Bs. i. 289; á niundu tíð dags, Stj. 41, (but rarely);
yet the old form is often retained in writing.

II. in case A. II. the article may be dropped; þann gamla man, þá gömlu konu, það gamla skáld, þú armi, etc.; sá ráða-góði, sá goðum-liki, sá ágæti Odysseifr, sú vitra Penelopa, sá Jarðkringjandi Pósiðon, Od. passim (in Dr. Egilsson's translation). III. in case A. III. 1. the article is also dropped, Knútr Ríki, Haraldr Hárfagi; even old writers (esp. in later vellums) omitted it now and then, Hálfdan Svarta, Fms. i. 1; Haraldr Grænski, 90; Haraldr

IV. in case A. III. 2. the pronouns sá, sú, það, and hinn, hin, hit may be used indiscriminately, although the former is more usual. V. lastly, in case B. the suffixed article has gained ground, and is in modern prose used more freq. than in ancient.

CONCLUSION.—The old poetical language, with the sole exception of a single poem, had no article in the modern and proper sense; in every instance the 'inn, in, it' bears the character of a demonstrative pronoun, preceding an adjective and enhancing and emphasising its sense, like the pers. pron. hann, q. v.; but it is never attached to a single substantive; when the adjective was placed in apposition after a noun, the pronoun came to stand as an enclitic just after the noun, and was sounded as if suffixed thereto; at last it was tacked as an actual suffix to single nouns standing without apposition, and thus the true suffixed article gradually arose, first in speech, then in writing; whereas at the same time the old pronominal enclitic (A. I-III) gradually went out of use, and was either dropped or replaced by the stronger demonstrative pronoun 'sá, sú.'

HINN, HIN, HITT, demonstr. pron., prob. identical in etymology with the preceding word, from which it is however distinguished, 1. by the neut. hitt, Dau. hint; 2. by the initial aspirate, which is never dropped; 3. by being a fully accented pronoun, so that the h can stand as an alliterative letter, e. g. bandar ennar bægr | mun ek binnar geta, Ls.; veitkat ek hitt hvart Heita | þungr ..., Hallfred; Hitt kvað þá
Hamðir, etc., Hdm. 23, 25, Korm. 40; Raun er hins at Heinir | bræ ...;
Skáld biðr bins at baldi | þjálm ..., Sighvat, Hkv. Hjörv. 26: [Ulf.
jains = ékeivos; A. S. geond; Engl. yon; Germ. jener.]

A. This pronoun is used, I. in a demonstr. sense, emphatically and without being opp. to a preceding demonstr.; raun er hins HLAUT, f. (not n.); the gender is borne out by the genitive tein hlautar, Vellekla; as also by the dat. hlautinni, Landn. (App.) 336, in an old transcript of the lost vellum Vatnsþyrna (see Kjaln. S. Ísl. ii. 403, where hlautinn):—the blood of sacrifice, used for soothsaying; this word is derived from hlutr (hlautr), as an abbreviated form, for hlaut-blóð = sanguis sortidicus, and refers to the rite, practised in the heathen age, of enquiring into the future by dipping bunches of chips or twigs into the blood, and shaking them; those twigs were called teinar, hlaut-teinar, hlaut-viðr, blót-spánn, q. v.; the act of shaking was called hrista teina, to shake twigs, Hym. 1; kjósa hlautvið, to choose lot chips, Vsp. In Vellekla the true reading is prob. hann (earl Hakon) valdi (from velja, MS. vildi) tein hlautar, meaning the same as kjósa hlautvið in Vsp., an emendation borne out by the words 'felldi blótspánn' (Fagrsk. l. c.) in the prose text, which is a paraphrase of the verse; the explanation of the passage in Lex. Poët. is no doubt erroneous. It was also called fella blótspánn, see that word, p. 71. The walls of the temple inside and out, the altars, and the worshippers were sprinkled with the blood, the flesh of the slain cattle was to be eaten (whereas the blood was a sacrifice, as well as the means of augury, and was not to be eaten); this rite is described in Hkr. Hásk. S. Góða ch. 16: en blóð þat allt er þar kom af (i. e. from the slain cattle) þá var þat kallat hlaut ok hlaut-bollar þat er blóð þat stóð í, ok hlaut-teinar, þat var svá gört sem stöklar (bunches); með því skyldi rjóða stallana öllu saman, ok svá veggji höfsins útan ok innan, ok svá stökkva á mennina; en slátr (the meat) skyldi hafa til mann-fagnaðar: the passages in Eb. ch. 4, p. 6 new Ed., in Kjaln. S. ch. 2, and in Landn. (App.), are derived from the same source as the passage in Hkr., but present a less correct and somewhat impaired text; even the text in Hkr. is not quite clear, esp. the phrase, þat var gört sem stökkull, which prob. means that the hlaut-teinar were bound up in a bunch and used for the sprinkling. The blood-sprinkling mentioned in Exod. xii. 22 illustrates the passage above cited; cp. hleyti, hljóta, and hlutr.

hólm-ganga, u, f. 'bolm-gang, bolm-going,' a duel or wager of bo fought on an islet or 'holm,' which with the ancients was a kind of appeal or ordeal; and wherever a Thing (parliament) was held, a p was appointed for the wager of battle, as the holm in the Axe River the alpingi. The hólm-ganga differed from the plain einvigi or duel being accompanied by rites and governed by rules, whilst the latter not,—þvíat á hólm-göngu er vandhæfi en alls eigi á einvigi, Korm. The ancient Icel. Sagas abound in wagers of battle, chiefly the Korm ch. 10 and passim: some champions were nicknamed from the cust c. g. Hólm-göngu-Bersi (Korm. S.), Hólm-göngu-Starri, Hólm-göngu-M Hólm-göngu-Hrafn, Landn. About A. D. 1006 (see Tímatall), the he ganga was abolished by law in the parliament, on account of the unha feud between Gunnlaug Snake-tongue and Skald-Hrafn, Gunnl. S. ch. cp. Valla L. ch. 5 (þá vóru af tekin hólm-göngu-lög öll ok hólm-göng referring to about A. D. 1010; a single instance however of a challenge in the north of Icel. is recorded after this date (about the year 1040), but it was not accepted (Lv. S. ch. 30); the wager in Lv. ch was previous (though only by a few years) to the fight between Gunn and Rafn. It is curious that Jón Egilsson, in his Lives of Bishops (with about A. D. 1600, Bisk. Ann. ch. 36, Safn i. 64), mentions a wage battle between the parties of the two bishops, Jón Arason and Ögmundur on the old holm in the Axe River A. D. 1529; but the whole is evident a mere reproduction of the tale of the Horatii in Livy. Maurer th that the two important acts of legislation, the institution of the F Court in 1004 and the abolition of the ordeal of hólm-ganga a few years later, are closely connected, as the institution of the new court of appeal made the decision by battle superfluous. In Norway, if we are to believe Grett. S. ch. 21 (þá tók Eirkr af allar hólm-göngur í Noregi), the hólgöngur were abolished about the year 1012. It is very likely that that tournaments of the Norman age, fought in lists between two set champions, sprang from the heathen hólm-ganga, though this was also a single combat. For separate cases see the Sagas, Korm. S. l. c., Gunnl. l. c., Eg. ch. 57, 67, Nj. ch. 24, 60, Landn. 2, ch. 13, 3, ch. 7, Rd. cl. 19, Gísl. init., Glúm. ch. 4, Valla L. l. c., Hallfr. S. ch. 10. A cur kind of duel in a tub is recorded in Flóam. S. ch. 17, called kerga perhaps akin to the mod. Swed. fight in a belt. For England see Edmund Head's interesting notes to Glúm. HREINN, m. [the word is prob. of Finnish origin. From the words of king Alfred, (þa deor he hátað hránas, Orosius i. i. § 15, Bosworth's Ed.), it seems that the king knew the name only from Othhere's tale; and when Egil in his poem on king Athelstian (if the verse be genuine) calls Northern England hreinbraut, the reindeers' track, the phrase is prob. merely poet. of a wilderness. There is however a curious passage in Orkn. (448) where the hunting of reindeer in Caithness is recorded; the Icel. text is here only preserved in a single MS.; but though the Danish translation in Stockholm (of the year 1615) has the same reading, it is probably only a mistake of the Saga; for it is not likely that the Norsemen carried reindeer across the sea; the present breed was introduced into Icel. by the government only a century ago];—a reindeer, Hrn. 89, K. p. HREPPR, m.:—this word remains in 'the Rape of Bramber' in Sussex, and is undoubtedly Scandinavian, being probably derived, as Pal Vidálin suggested, from hreppa, and thus originally meaning a share, allotment; it may be that the proper name Hrappr (Landn.) is akin (= a yeoman, master of a Rape ?); for the bad sense of that name (= a traitor) is a metonymy, borrowed from the person of that name in the Njála. After the introduction of Christianity, all Icel. was, for the maintenance of the poor, divided into poor-law districts called hreppar, which still exist, being in most cases, though not always, identical with the sókn or parish; and it is remarkable that the district round the Bishop's seat at Skalholt bears the local name Hreppar, indicating that this division had the Bishop's house as its nucleus. The occurrence therefore of this name in the Landn. is an anachronism; as probably are also the few instances in which hreppr is used as an appellative in records of the heathen age, e. g. Lv. l. c. It is not known when the division into Rapes took place; perhaps it took place gradually during the 11th century; vera á hrepp, koma á hreppinn, to be or become a pauper. In the Grágás a special section (and as it seems one of the oldest) is called 'um Hreppa-skil,' Kb. ii. 171-180; 'um Hreppa-lög,' Sb. i. 443-458. Twenty franklins at least constituted a lawful Rape, Kb. ii. 171. (These remarks are partly due to Konrad Maurer.) COMPDS: hreppa-dómr, m. a Rape court, Grág. i. 245, 448. hreppa-lög, n. pl. the laws and rules of a Rape, Grág. i. 443. Hreppa-maðr, m. a man from the district Hreppar, Sturl. ii. 248. hreppa-mál, n. Rape affairs, Grág. ii. 178 new Ed. hreppa-mót, n. pl. the march or border of two Rapes, Grág. i. 444. hreppa-skil, n. pl. Rape business, Lv. 17; in mod. usage, the autumn meeting held in every Rape. hreppa-tal, n. the census of a Rape, Grág. i. 443. hrepps-fundr, m. a Rape meeting, Grág. i. 296, 446, 448. hrepps-maðr, m. a franklin of a certain Rape, Grág. i. 248, 256, 262, 295, 445. hrepps-sókn, f. the management of a Rape, the office of the Rape councils, = mod. hreppstjórn, Grág. i. 445. hrepps-sóknar-menn, m. pl. the members of the five Rape councils, Grág. i. 295, 455, passim. hrepps-stjóri, a, m. = hreppstjóri, Grág. i. 262. hrepps-úmagi, a, m. a pauper.

hrep-stefna, u, f. = hreppsfundr, Sturl. i. 185. hrep-stjóri, a, m. a 'Rape-steerer,' overseer, Jb. 186, Vm. 116: in each Rape in Icel. the best yeoman is chosen as hreppstjóri by the sheriff (amtmaðr) or, as in former days, by the parishioners, but he is not paid; he has, jointly with the parish priest, to manage the business of the Rape, esp. to see to the maintenance of the poor, fix the poor-rate of each franklin, and, as there are no poor-houses, to arrange the distribution of the poor (úmagar) among the parishioners. In the days of the Commonwealth there was a committee of five members, called hreppstjórnarmenn (q. v.), which discharged the duties of the present hreppstjóri; með ráði heima-prests ok hreppstjóra, Vm. 116. This word does not occur in the Grágás, but only after A. D. 1281; for the reading hreppstjóri in the D. I. i. 199 (in a deed supposed to be of A. D. 1150) is only found in a mod. transcript, and the original prob. had hreppstjórnarmenn (pl.) hrepp-stjórni, f. the office of a hreppstjóri, Jb. 184: the management of a Rape, K. Á. 96, Jb. 178. hreppstjórnar-þing, n. = hreppa-skil or hreppsfundr, Jb. 182.

HUNDRAD, n. pl. hundræð; the form hund- (q. v.) only occurs few old compd words: [Goth. bunda, pl.; A. S. hund; O. H. G. bu the extended form in Hel. and old Frank. bundered; Germ. buna Dan. hundred; Swed. hundra; the inflexive syllable is prob. aki -ræðr in átt-ræðr]:—a hundred; the Scandinavians of the heathen (and perhaps also all Teutonic people) seem to have known only a decimal hundred (= 12 × 10 or 120); at that time 100 was expressed tiu-tiu, cp. Ulf. taibun-taibund = ten-teen; Pal Vidalin says,—hún tóllfrætt er sannlega frá heiðni til vor komið, en hið tíræða er líka Norðrlönd hafi ekki vitað af fyrr en Kristni kom hér og með henni dómr þeirrar aldar, Skýr. s. v. Hundrað (fine): but with the introduction of Christianity came in the decimal hundred, the two being distinguished adjectives,—tóllfrætt hundræð = 120, and tírætt hundræð = 100. But this old popular duodecimal system continued in almost all matters connected with economical or civil life, in all law phrases, in trade, exchange, percy, value, or the like, and the decimal only in ecclesiastical or school matters (chronology, e. g. Íb. ch. 1, 10). At the same time the wo speech and writing was commonly used without any specific tírætt or tóllfrætt, for, as Pal Vidalin remarks, every one acquainted the language knew which was meant in each case; even at the pr time an Icel. farmer counts his flocks and a fisherman his share (t by the duodecimal system; and everybody knows that a herd or sha one hundred and a half means 120 + 60 = 180. In old writers the po way of counting is now and then used even in chronology and in putation, e. g. when Ari Frode (Íb. ch. 4) states that the year consists three hundred and four days (meaning 364); the census of frat given by the same writer (where the phrase is hundrúð heil = whole full hundreds) is doubtless reckoned by duodecimal, not decimal hund Íb. ch. 10; and in the census of priests and churches taken by bisþof (about A. D. 1200) 'tíræð' is expressively added, lest duodecimal hund should be understood, Bs. i. 136. The Landn. (at end) contains a ment (from Ari?) that Iceland continued pagan for about a hundred i. e. from about 874–997 A. D. In the preface to Ólaf's S. states that two duodecimal hundreds (tvau hundrúð tóllfræð) elapsed the first colonisation of Iceland before historical writing began (i. e. about A. D. 874–1115): levies of ships and troops are in the law Sagas counted by duodecimal hundreds, e. g. the body-guard of Olave consisted of a hundred hírd-men, sixty house-carles and sixty i in all 'two hundred' men, i. e. 240, Mork. 126; the sons of earl Strúthundred men, of whom eighty were billeted out and forty returned, 88, 89; hálf hundrad, a half hundred = sixty, Mork. l. c. 2. Division of troops = 120; hundrads-flokkur, Fms. vi. (in a verse). II. Sense, hundreds, a host, countless number, see hund-, as also in verb. phrase, hundruðum, by hundreds (indefinitely), Fms. vi. 407, 475, 524: in mod. usage as adjective and indecl., except the pl. in hundruð ásaundum, Dipl. iv. 10.

As value, a hundred, i. e. a hundred and twenty ells of the wadmal, and then simply value to that amount (as a pound sterling value). All property, real as well as personal, is even at present taxed by hundreds; thus an estate is a 'twenty, sixty, hundred' franklin gives his tithable property as amounting to so and so many hundreds. As for the absolute value of a hundred, a few cents are sufficient, thus e. g. a milch cow, or six ewes with lambs, for a hundred, and a hundrad and a kúgildi (cow's value) are the charge for the alimentation of a pauper for twelve months by law (Jb. 165) fixed to four hundred and a half for a male person, three hundred and a half for a female; cp. also the phrase, það hundrad í hætunni, there is no hundred at stake, no great risk! In times a double standard was used,—the wool or wadmal standard, hundrad talið = a hundred by tale, i. e. a hundred and twenty ells above, and a silver standard, called hundrad vegit, a hundred by weight or hundrad silfrs, a hundred in silver, amounting to two marks or half = twenty ounces = sixty örtugar; but how the name hundred came to be applied to it is not certain, unless half an örtug was taken as a unit.

It is probable that originally both standards were identical, denoted by the phrase, sex álra eyrir, six ells to an ounce, or a hundred and twenty ells equal to twenty ounces (i. e. wadmal and silver) but according as the silver coinage was debased, the phrases between nine, ten, eleven, twelve ells to an ounce (N. G. L. i. 80, 81, 82, passim), which denote bad silver; whereas the phrase 'three ounces' (briggja álra eyrir, Sturl. i. 163, passim, or a hundred in equal to half a hundred in silver) must refer either to a double ell or twice as pure: the passage in Grág. i. 500 is somewhat as also Rd. 233: the words vegin, silfrs, or talin are often used in most cases no specification is given, and the context must show which of the two standards is there meant; the wool standard is used in one, but in cases of wergild the silver standard seems always to be understood; thus a single wergild (the fine for a man's life) was valued, Njálá passim.

2. The phrases, hundrad frítt, a hundred at once, Fimub. 226; tólf hundruð mórend, twelve hundred in dark wadmal, Nj. 225; hundrad í búsgögnum ok í húsbúningi, Vm. hundrads-gripur, hestr, hross, kapall, hvila, væng, rekkja, psaltari, etc., a horse, a bed, etc., of a hundred's value, Am. 2, 10, Vm. 25, 53, Jm. 3, 30; hundrads-úmagi, a person whose maintenance is a hundred, Vm. 156; hundrads virði, a hundred's value, 68. For these see the Sagas and laws passim, and for more information see Dr. N. J. Essay in Burnt Njal.

A hundred, a political division which in olden times was common to Teut. nations, but is most freq. in old Swedish laws, where hundreds made a hérad or shire; cp. the A. S. and Engl. hundred, a hundredredum; old Germ. hundredert, see Grimm's Rechts Alterth. centum pagi of Caesar, Bell. Gall. iv. ch. 1, is probably the writer's misconception of the Teut. division of land into hundreds; or the case with Tacit. Germ. ch. 12: cp. the Swed. local names a-land, Attundaland, and Tiunda-land, qs. Fjadr-hunda land, Áttundaland, Tíhunda land, i. e. a combination of four, eight, ten hundred—the original meaning was probably a community of a hundred franklins or captains. This division is not found in Iceland.

For old dried up hverar see Itin. 295; also the remarks s. v. Geysir and Ann. 1294. From hverar-lundr Vsp. an Icel. origin of this poem is suggested by Prof. Bergmann in Poèmes Islandaises, Paris 1838, p. 183, as the verse seems to refer volcanic agencies.

HVERR, pron. interrog. and indef.; at the present day proncd. hv with u throughout, and in mod. printed books usually spelt hvör, a form no doubt derived from the dual hvár (hvorr), used in a plur. sense: its declension, see Gramm. p. xxi; an acc. hverjan, Hým. 39; hver morgin, Vsp. 22, Fb. ii. 71 (in a verse); hverjan dag, Vþm. 11, 18, 23, Gm. 8, 14, 20, 29; hverjan veg, Vþm. 18; whence the contracted fr hvern. [The Gothic has a threefold interrog. pron., a sing. hwaz, b þwa; a dual, þwaz; and a plur. þwarjis, þwarja, þwarjata. To first of these pronouns answers the old Icel. form hvar, A. S. hwa, S. wha, Engl. who, Swed. ho, Dan. hvo, cp. Lat. quis; but this pronoun is dative, and remains only in the neut. hvát, q. v., Ulf. hwa, A. S. hwat, E. what, Germ. was, Dan.-Swed. hvad, Lat. quid: the dat. masc. hveir obsolete, Goth. hwamma, Engl. whom, Dan. hvem: the dat. hvi (hvát II, III): a nom. masc. hvar (hva-r) seems to be used a times in old MSS. (e. g. Kb. of the Grágás), but it is uncertain, as word is usually abbreviated hr or hr: a kind. sing. hves (Goth. h, North. E. whese) occurs, hves lengra, þou much farther? Hom. (St.) til hves, to what? 65; possibly the ἄρ. λεγ. hós, Ls. 33, is a remnant of the old gen. To the Goth. dual answers the Icel. hvár (hvazari), cp. To the Goth. plur. answers the Icel. hverr, with characteristic hv, which is used in sing. and plur. alike. In the neut. sing. the two forms, hv and hvert, are distinguished thus, that hvát (hvad) is interrog. h. indef., e. g. hvad barn, what bairn? but hvert barn, every bairn.]

Hvíta-Kristr, m. 'W Christ,' was the favourite name of Christ; hafa láti mik heitan Hvíta-K at víti eld, ef. . . , Sighvat; another poet (Edda 91) uses the word; iu prose, dugi þú mér, Hvíta-Kristr, help thou me, White-Christ! 2. the great festivals, Yule (see Ld. ch. 40), Easter-tocost, but especially the two latter, were the great seasons for song; in the Roman Catholic church especially Easter, whence in usage the first Sunday after Easter was called Dominica in Albis; in the northern churches, perhaps owing to the cold weather at Easter-tocost, as the birthday of the church, seems to have been specially so for christening and for ordination, see Hungv. ch. 2, Thome. Hence the following week was termed the Holy Week (Helga vika). Hence, Pentecost derived its name from the white garments, called Hvíta-dagar, the White days, i. e. Whitsun-week; frá því innum fyrsta skulu vera vikur sjau til Drottins-dags í Hvítadögum, Drottinsdag í Hvítadögum skulu vér halda sem hinn fyrsta dag, K. þ. The name that at last prevailed was Hvítasunna, Whitsun, i. e. White-sun, D. N. ii. 263, 403: Hvítasunnudagr, Whitsunday, Fb. ii. 546, Fms. viii. 63, v. l.: Hvítasunnudags-vika, Whitsun-week, Fb. ii. 546; Páskaviku, ok Hvítasunnudagsviku, ok þú fyrir Jónsvöku, ok svá fyrir Michiáls-messu, N. G. L. i. 150; Whitsunday, Thom. 318. As the English was the mother-church of Norway and Iceland, the Icelandic eccl. phrases are derived from the English language. See Bingham's Origgs. v. v. White Garments, Dominica in Albis, where however no reference is given to Iceland.

In modern Denmark and Norway the old name has been preserved by Pindse, i. e. Pfingsten, derived from the Greek word πεντηκστή in Incl., as in Engl., only the name Hvítasunna is known. In Denmark the people make a practice of thronging to the woods sun morning to see the rising of the sun, and returning with branches in their hands, the trees being just in bud at that season.

HÖFUÐR, m., gen. ar; the masc. inflex. -undr reminds one of Gothic (Gramm. p. xxxii. B. V); in old writers the word is only four times, always in the sense of a judge, and ref. chiefly to Gothland in Sweden; Höfundr (a mythol. pr. name manna virastr, ok svá réttðæmr, at hann hallaði aldri réttum dómr ok af haus nafni skyldi sá höfundr heita í hverju ríki er mál ræmð, Fas. (Hervar. S.) i. 523, cp. 513; as also in Hrólfs S. Krak ferring to Gothland), höfundr einn var þar til settar at skora þett með sannindum, settusk margir í þetta sæti, ok kallaði höfundr sín sæma, þórir gengr seinast ok sezk hann þegar í stólinn; höfundr þér er sætið hæfligast, ok muntu dæmðr til þessarar stjórnar, Fas. sigr-höfundr, the judge of victory, the Lord of battle, a name giv Odin by Egil, Stor. 21: lastly in Thorodd, skáld er höfundar allrar eða máls-greina, sem smíðir málgripa (?), eðr lögmenn laga, the are judges in all matters of grammar and syntax, as smíts in manship, and lawyers in law, Skálda (Thorodd) 164; this passage: as the preceding is erroneously rendered in the earlier translations, in Lex. Poët.

II. An author, originator; the revival of ancient word, in quite a different sense, is curious; it does not occur any of the earliest glossaries of the 17th century nor in the Bible Vídalín, but, as it seems for the first time, in the Lexidion Islandicæ num, published at Copenhagen A. D. 1734, as a rendering of the author, and was probably inserted by some learned philologist (Jón son?) from the passage in Skálda, by a mistake. 2. by the of the century it came to be used = a writer, and is now freq. in sense, either rit-höfundr or singly; but still in 1781, in the preface of that year, ritsmíðr (writ-smíð) and höfundr are both used, so that the latter was not yet settled, though at present the use word is quite fixed.

 höku-nótt, f. mid-winter night, about the time of Epiphany, when the heathen Yule began; a ἀστ. λεγ.: hann setti þat í lögum at hefja Jóna-miðsvetrar-nótt (thus in Fms. i. 32, l. c.), ok halðin þriggja (þrettán?) nátt Jól, Hkr. i. 138 (Hák. S. Adalst. ch. 15). The Scot. bogmaney, = the last day of the year or a feast given on that day, is a remnant of this ancient word. The heathen Yule seems among the Scandinavians to have been celebrated about three weeks later than Christmas; but the Norse king Hakon, who had been brought up in Christian England, altered the time of the festival, so as to make it correspond with the English Yule or Christmas; and so the heathen hökunótt came to represent our Christmas Eve. The etymology is not known.

 höld-borinn, part. born of a höld (see höldr), enjoying a höld's right, HÖLDR, m., in old MSS. spelt harðr or harþr, denoting that the d is inflexive, not radical; [the word therefore is not to be derived from halda, but is identical with A. S. hæled, Germ. held, whence mod. Swed. and Dan. hjalta and belt, see halr]:—a Norse law term, a kind of bigber yeoman, like the statesman of Westmoreland, i. e. the owner of allodial land, mod. Norse odelsbonde; the höld is to be distinguished from a hersir (q. v.) or a lenðr maðr, who held land in fee from the king, see the interesting story in Har. S. Harðr. ch. 62 (Fms. vi. 278); the höld is thus defined, sá er harðr er hann hefir óðil at erðrum tekit bæði eptir föður ok móður, þau er hans forellrar (forefathers) hafa átt áður fyrir þeim, N. G. L. ii. 146; hölda tvá eða bændr ína beztu, i. 251. In old Norway the churchyards were divided into four parts; in the first were buried the lenðr menn, next them the hölds and their children (hölds-lega), then the freed men (leysingjar), and lastly the thralls (man, q. v.) nearest to the wall; the höld had right to twice as much as the simple franklin, and half as much as the lenðr maðr, e. g. bóandi hálfan annan eyri, höldr þjá ára, lenðr maðr sex ára, jarl tólf ára, konungr þrjár merkr, N. G. L. i. 45, ild to be paid for a höld (löðs-gjöld) see N. G. L. i. 81: a law 83, whence Hölga-brúðr, f. the bride of Hölgi, or Hölga-tröll, n.

 hörga-brúðr are less correct forms, Nj. 131 (v. l.), Fb. i. 213; for the various readings in different MSS. see Jóns S. ch. 44, Nj. ch. 89: this is the name of two weird sisters worshipped by the earls of Hlaðir; the passage in Skálda l. c. refers to some lost myth concerning these sisters.

 HÖLL, f., gen. hallar, often spelt hall without umlaut, Fb. i. 212, l. 26, Fas. iii. 42, 87, Fms. viii. 191, v. 1.; as also rhymed so in poets, e. g. Geisli II; [A. S. beal, gen. bealle; Engl. ball; Hel. balla; but not found in old and mid. H. G., the mod. Germ. balle being a borrowed word, Grimm's Gr. iii. 427]—a ball, but in the Norse only of a king's or earl's hall, whereas a private dwelling is called skáli, eldhús, q. v.; and thus 'hall' never could be used of an Icel. dwelling. In earlier times it seems to have had a more general sense, which remains in a verse of Kormak, Korn. 42:—in the mythology and old poems 'hall' is also used of the hall of gods, giants, Vpm., Hým., Lv.; Val-höll, Valballa, the ball of the slain, of Odin, Gm., Edda: as also Guðs höll, God's hall—the beaven, Geisli; dags höll, days' ball, the sky; höll fjalla, mountain ball, the sky; lífs höll, life's hall, the breast, Lex. Poët.:—in prose constantly, konungs-höll, a king's hall, or hall simply, passim. For the building, structure, seats of a hall, see the Sagas passim, Fagrsk. ch. 219, 220, Hrólf's S. As all heathen Scandinavian buildings were of timber, the hall of stone of Nj. ch. 6 is no doubt an anachronism. compds: hallar-búnadr, -búningr, m. the bangings of a ball, Fms. x. 235, xi. 16. hallar-dyrr, n. pl. ball-doors, Edda 2, Fas. i. 15, Al. 70. hallar-gólf, n. a ball-floor, Edda 31, Fms. iii. 188, vii. 157, Fas. i. 284. hallar-veggr, m. the wall of a ball, Fms. iv. 189, Sks. 709: HÖLL, name of an Icel. farm, Skáld H., whence Hallar-Steinn, a pr. name.

HÖRGR, m., never f., for the form hörgr (Landn. 111) is merely an error; [A. S. bearg; O. H. G. baruc] :—a heathen place of worship. Distinction is to be made between hof (temple) and horg; the hof was a house of timber, whereas the horg was an altar of stone (the látimbradr in Vfm. is not literal) erected on high places, or a sacrificial cairn (like haugr), built in open air, and without images, for the horg itself was to be stained with the blood of the sacrifice; hence such phrases as, to 'break' the horgs, but 'burn' the temples. The horg worship reminds one of the worship in high places of the Bible. The notion of a 'high place' still remains in the popular Icel. phrase, það eru ekki uppi nema hæstu hörgar, only the biggest horgs jut out, when all lies under a deep snow. In provincial Norse a dome-shaped mountain is called borg (Ivar Aasen). The worship on horgs seems to be older than that in temples, but was in after times retained along with temple worship, and then, it seems, specially reserved for the worship of the goddesses or female guardians (disir), Hervar. S. ch. 1, Hdl. l. c., Edda l. c., cp. also Hörga-brúdr, f. the bride of the borgs, see Hölg. Many of the old cairns and hows are no doubt horgs or high places of worship of the heathen age. A third way of worshipping is recorded, viz. a portable booth or tabernacle in which the god was carried through the land, mentioned in Tacit. Germ. ch. 40; traces of this ancient worship were still found in Sweden at the close of heathendom, see the interesting tale of Gunnar Helming in Fms. ii. 73-78. hösvir, m. a gray wolf, Edda (Gl.): name of a slave, from his dress, Rm.

höttóttur, adj. booded, of cows or sheep with heads differing in colour from the body.

HÖTTR, m., hattar, hetti, acc. pl. höttu, a later form hattur, Dropl. 13, Eg. 407, Nj. 32, 46, Gisl. 55, O. H. L. 46, as also in mod. usage; [the A. S. bōd, Engl. bood, O. H. G. buot, Dutch boed, Germ. bat may perhaps be identical; but A. S. bæt, Engl., Dan., and Swed. bat certainly answer to the old höttur, cp. also hetta, q. v.]:—a bood, in olden times only a cowl fastened to a cloak, as is seen from numerous instances, Fms. i. 149, ii. 72, viii. 368, x. 225, 229, 301, Eg. 375, 407, Grág. ii. 132: a cowl of felt, þófa-höttur, Dropl. 13, Nj. 179.

2. of a gorgeous foreign bood or turban from the east, Fms. xi. 77, 85; called Gerzkr (Russian) in Nj. 46, Gisl. 55, or Girskr (Greek) in O. H. L. 46; Danskr höttur, a Danish bood, Ó. H.: a hat in the mod. sense was unknown to the men of old; even the hat-like helmet was called stál-húfa, a steel cap, not stál-höttur.

III. in poetry the head is called hattar land, -hauðr, -stallr, -fell, -steði, the land, knell, felly of the bood; or hatt-staup, n. a hat-knoll, Ad.: Odin is represented wearing a hött, and so the helmet is called the bood of Odin, etc.; as also Ála höttur: the vaulted sky is foldar höttur = earth's bood, Lex. Poët.: dular-h., huldar-h., a hiding bood, bood of disguise. hattar-maðr, m. a booded man, man in disguise, Rd. 272; Sið-höttur, 'Deep-bood,' was a favourite name of Odin from his travelling in disguise, cp. Robin Hood.

III. a pr. name, Fas.

hötuðr, m. [hata], a hater, Lex. Poët.

I Í J

I is the ninth letter; in the old Runic alphabet it was called iss or (Skálda 176), and represented by I (is köllum brú breiða of the Rm poem), a form borrowed from the Greek or Latin: but 'stunginn' (I) was in later Runes used to represent e.

A. PRONUNCIATION, SPELLING.—I is either a vowel (i), or consonant (j), called jod: these are here treated separately: 1. the vowel (i) is sounded either short (i) or long (í), the short (i) like Engl. i prolonged with a breath; but it is almost certain that in olden i was sounded short, as in Engl. wit. 2. the long (í) is sounded Engl. e or ee in evil, feat. 3. the j is sounded as Engl. y before vowel, jata, jarð, jól, as yata, yard, yale. The oldest writers witness to the use of j as a consonant; thus Thorodd says, — þi hann verðr fyrir samhljóðanda settr, Skálda 164; and the second grammarian, — en ef hljóðstafr (vowel) er næstr eptir hann, þá skiptisk hann málstafr (consonant), svo sem já, jörð eða jör, 170; and Olave Hvítstak — ok u hafa því fleiri greinir, at þeir eru stundum samhljóðendr, see þessum orðum, iarl and utr, 176; but in syllables beginning with j (jo, ju) in old alliterative poetry it always stands for the vo from the earliest poems down to the 15th century, e. g. jörð or ey íða-græna, Vsp. 58; viltu nokkut jötuninn eiga [ýtum görir hann k seiga, þrymlur 2. 2; Ólmóðr hafði annan dag [járnid þetta at s Skíða R. 64, which, as now pronounced, would sound harsh, s in modern poetry syllables beginning with j cannot be used alternately with any other letter, cp. Pass. 37. 1, 10, 40. 8, 46. 3, 11, e only in such words as eg (jeg), eta (jeta) can i serve both as a vowel and consonant, see Pass. 6. 2; but jeg in 5. 5, 10, (the verse 6 of same hymn is a poetical licence); so also the name Jesús is now then used alliteratively with a vowel, 47. 18, 21; the hymns of Reformation follow the same usage. The pronunciation of j therefore to have changed: in early times it was probably similar Engl. e in ear, tear, bear; an additional proof of this is, that the old spelling was, as in Anglo-Saxon, ea, eo . . .; and Thorodd himself wrote ea, e. g. eaþn, eaörn, earl, for jaþn, járn, jarl, see his words old poets ea sometimes makes two syllables, e. g. in the verse cite Skálda 164 (of A. D. 1018); as also in the name Njáll (Niel), w is dissyllabic in the verses, Nj. ch. 136, 146. At a still earlier j was probably sounded purely as a vowel. II. in an MSS. i serves for both i and j; in MSS., esp. of the 15th century used ornamentally for initial i, e. g. jnn = inn, as also in the double i e. g. tíjd = tíð, míjt = mítt, the j was introduced into print only in last year of the eighteenth century. 2. an i is often inserted in a esp. after g, k, so as to mark the aspirate sound, e. g. gieta = geta, giæta, kiær = kær, etc.: in inflexions it is also more correct to write e bejar, than eyar, bæar: — ji is not written, but pronounced, e. g. vilvilji), but vilja.

B. CHANGES.—The i and e are exchanged in many root syllables but i is usually the older, e the later if not the modern form if and ef, brinna and brenna, tvinnr and tvennr, þrimr and þremr, and meðal, snimma and snemma, gingu and gengu, finqu and feugu and tegr: the article varies between enn and inn: — the inflex. -end -ind — Norse MSS. spell mek, þek, sek, = mik, þik, sek (e. g. T. Cd. Holm.); -igr and -legr, gagnligr and gagnlegr: for the inflex and i see introduction to letter E (signif. B), p. 114: — i for y in old i in firir, ifir, mind, skildi, minni (mouþ), minnast (to kiss, mouþ): — u are interchanged in inflexion, as, morginn and morgun, vandill vöndull; but esp. in the adjective inflexions -igr and -ugr, blóðigr blóðugr, auðigr and auðugr.

II. the j in most instances originates from an e, either through absorption or contraction, as in jór (q. v.) through the dissolution or breaking of e, as in jörð (q. v.); again, the initial i is in most instances caused by absorption; as of n in i (in compds; of v or b in illr (evil) and compds; of d in some compds in i id: — in Gothic there is only a single word (eisarn, i. e. isarn = iron) with long i initial.

III. by comparison with other Teutonic languages it is seen that a radical initial i or j has in the Scandinavian been dropped in a few words, while it has been kept in Gothic, Saxon, and German Icel. ár, Goth. jēr, Engl. year, Germ. jahr; Icel. ungr, Goth. juggs, young; Icel. ok, Goth. juk, Engl. yoke, Germ. joch, Lat. jugum; ami, ómurligr, and O. H. G. jamar, Germ. jammer; Icel. upp, Goth. up; Icel. ér (ye), Goth. jus; Icel. ostr (a cheese), cp. Engl.: in two words, jarteign and jurt, both of them probably foreign, stands for w: on the other hand, because of the resolution or breaking of vowels (Gramm. p. xxix, bottom), words which in Engl. and Goth. begin with e are in Icel. often to be found under j, thus Icel. jörð Scot. yerth = Engl. earth, Germ. erde: there are also a few stray y — jata (a manger) for eta, jeta for eta, jeg for eg (ek).

Icel. t answers to Ulf. ei (risa, Goth. reisjan), to mod. Germ. ei in Engl. i as in time, Icel. tími; in early German the diphthongs ei and i as in Icelandic, distinguished (zeit, isarn, = mod. zeit, eisen).

an. in a few words the Icel. short i is represented by an e, thus id, liðr, viðr, siðr, biðja, linnr, viurr, sin, = Dan. ved, led, ved, sed, em, ven, sene, probably owing to the fact that the old Danish pronunciation of i was not the same as the present Icelandic.

ÍKORNI, a, m. a squirrel. This word is undoubtedly, as Grimm 20 suggests (s. v. eichhorn), not of Teut. origin, but a popular corruption 20 of the Gr. σκί-ουπος (= skale-tail), from which word all modern European 20 languages have borrowed the name of this animal; A. S. æcurn; early 20 Dutch eicoren; Dutch eekboren, eikboren, inkboren; O. H. G., mid. H. G., 20 and Germ. eichborne, eichborn; Dan. egeren; Swed. iekorn, ekorre; in the 20 Romance languages, old Fr. escuire; Fr. escureuil; Ital. schiriuolo; 20 whence Engl. squirrel. The word íkorni occurs in the heathen poem 20 Gm., but the word is outside the metre, spoiling the flow of the 20 verse, and was no doubt added afterwards; therefore, instead of 'Rata- 20 töskr heitir íkorni | er renna skal,' read 'Rata-töskr heitir | er renna 20 skal.' Perhaps the ancient Scand. name of the animal was töskr, 20 akin to Engl. tusk, A. S. tux, from its sharp teeth, and then Rati (= the 20 climber?) would in the verse be the pr. name, töskr the appellative of that animal; and thus Rata-töskur would stand for Ratitöskur = Rati the squirrel; see also Edda, Ó. H. 85, Sks. 115, Gpl. 448.

jarðkna-steinn, m. [prob. a for. word derived from the A. S. eorcnan-stán]:—a gem, it occurs only in the following poems, Vkv. 23, 33, Gkv. 1. 18, 3. 9, which may all have been composed by one man, who borrowed the word from the A. S.
JARL, m., older form earl, [Hel. erl; A. S. eorl; Engl. earl]: this word had a double sense, one old and common to the Saxons as well as the earliest Scandinavians, one later and specifically Norse, which afterwards became English through the Norse and Danish invasion, and was finally established by the Norman Conquest.
 A. A gentle, noble man, a warrior, and collect. gentlefolk, as opp. to the churl folk or common people (karlar, búendr); thus the old poem Rígs-mál distinguishes three classes, earls, churlls, and thralls (jarla-ætt, karla-ætt, þræla-ætt); so also in A. S. eorl and ceorl are almost proverbially opposed; in the old Saxon poem Heliand, 'erl' is used about a hundred times = a man. Prof. Munch suggested that the name of the Teutonic people Eruli or Heruli simply represents an appellative (warriors), which the Roman writers took to be a proper name. In the Scand. countries this use of jarl is rare and obsolete, but remains in poet. phrases, in old saws, and in law phrases; oddar görva jarli megin, spears make the earl's might, Mk. v.; rudda ek sem jarlar forðum mér til landa, I won me lands like the earls of yore, Glúm. (in a verse); jarls yndi, an earl's delight = a man's delight, Hm. 96; jörlum öllum ódal batni, Gh. 21; hláðit ér, earlar, eikiköstinn, 20; itrar jarla-brúðir, 'earl's-brides', ladies, Gkv. 1. 3; alsnotrir jarlar, the gentle earls, 2; eggja ek yðr, jarlar, Am. 54; jarla einbani, 'earl-slayer' = ἀνδροκτόνος, Em., Hkm.; karl-fólki ok jarla, churl folk and earl folk, Sighvat; eitt mein sækir hvern jarl, every earl (man) has his ill luck, Fb. ii. (in a verse): in the law, jarls jörð, an earl's estate, is opp. to konungs jörð, a king's estate, in the phrase, hálfan rétt skal hann taka er hann kömr á jarls jörð, en þá allan ok fullan er hann kömr á konungs jörð, Grág. (Kb.) i. 192, for this is undoubtedly the bearing of this disputed passage; jarlmaðr is opp. to búkarl, Fms. vii. (in a verse); so also karlmaðr (q. v.) in its oldest sense is opp. to jarlmaðr, = churl-man and earl-man; hirð-jarl = hirðmaðr, Fms. xi. 302, v. 1.; berg-jarl, poet. a 'crag-earl' = a giant, Edda (in a verse); bak-jarl, a 'back-earl,' an enemy in one's rear; of-jarl (q. v.), an 'over-earl,' an over-bearing man.
 B. A chief, as a title, specially Norse and Danish. The Landnáma, which is almost our only source for the political and personal history of Norway before king Harald Fairhair and the settlement of Iceland, records several chiefs of the 8th and 9th centuries who bore an earl's name as a family dignity; Ivarr Upplendinga-jarl (Upplönd, a Norse county), Asbjörn jarl Skerja-blei, Eyvindr jarl, 317; Atli jarl Mjóvi af Gaulum (a Norse county), þorkell Naumdæla-jarl (earl in Naumdale, a Norse county), 281; Grjótagarðr jarl í Sölva (a county), 297; and as a family title, the famous Háleygja-jarlar (the earls of the Norse county Hálogaland, whose pedigree from Odin was drawn out in the old poem Háleygja-tal; Hákon jarl Grjótagarðsson, etc.): so also the Mæra-jarlar, the earls of Mæri (a Norse county), the foremost of whom was Rögivaldr Mæra-jarl, the forefather of the earls of the Orkneys (Orkneyja-jarlar) and the earls of Rouen (Rúðu-jarlar = the dukes of Normandy).
 II. along with the Danish and Norse invasion the name appears in England, Bjartmúr jarl in Ireland, Landn.; Hunda-Steinarr, an earl in England, id.; see also the Saxon Chronicle passim, where the very name indicates a Danish or Norse connexion. It is very likely that many of the earls of the Landnáma were sovereign chiefs, differing from kings only in title, for in old poetry a king and an earl were addressed in the same way.
 III. about the time of Harald Fairhair all the petty chiefs became liegemen under one king, the earl being in dignity nearest the king, answering to comes in mid. Lat. and graf in Germ. In Scandinavia both name and office became extinct about the 13th century: in Iceland, being a commonwealth, it never took root; see however Gizur jarl (died A. D. 1268) in the Sturlunga.—For references see the Sagas passim, esp. Har. S. Harf. ch. 6.

JÓL, n. pl., in rhymes, gölig, Jóla, Ó. H. (in a verse); [A. S. geol, sometimes used of the whole month of December, whereas December is also called æra geola = fore Yule, and January æftera geola = after Yule; the plur. in Icel. perhaps refers to this double month. The origin and etymology of the word Yule is much contested, and has been treated at length by Grimm (Gesch. der Deutschen Sprache), who tries to make out a relation between the Lat. Julus or Julius and the Teut. Yule, the one being a midsummer month, the other a midwinter month; like former etymologists, he also derives the word from hjul, a wheel, as referring to the sun's wheeling round at midwinter and midsummer time. The resemblance of the words is striking, as also the old northern celebration of the midsummer feast Jónsvaka (see below), which was in fact a kind of midsummer Yule.]

B. Yule, a great feast in the heathen time, afterwards applied to Christmas (as still in North. E.) In Icel. popular usage Yule-eve is a kind of landmark by which the year is reckoned, so that a man is as many years old as he has passed Yule nights, hafa lífað (so and so) margar Jóla-nætr; for the year counts from Yule night, whence the phrase, vera illa or vel á ár kominn, to become well or ill in the year; thus a person born shortly before Yule is 'illa á ár kominn,' for at next Yule he will be reckoned one year old, whereas one born just after it is 'vel á ár kominn.' The heathen Yule lasted thirteen days, whence are derived the names þrettándi, the thirteenth = Epiphany, i. e. the 6th of January, as also the Engl. 'Twelfth-night'; it is however probable that the heathen feast was held a little later than the Christian (see hökunnótt). The heathen Yule was a great merry-making, and tales of ghosts, ogres, and satyrs were attached to it, esp. the Jóla-sveinar or 'Yule-lads,' a kind of goblins or monster satyrs, thirteen in number, one to each day of the feast, sons of the kidnapping hag Grýla (q. v.), whose names were used to frighten children with, see Ísl. Þjóðs. i. 219, 220. As the night lengthens and the day shortens, the ghosts gain strength, and reach their highest at Yule time, see Grett. ch. 34-37, 67-70, Eb. ch. 34, Flóam. S. ch. 22. The day next before Yule is called atfanga-dagr (q. v.) Jóla, when stores were provided and fresh ale brewed, Jóla-öl. Passages in the Sagas referring to Yule are numerous, e. g. Hervar. S. ch. 4, Hálf. S. Svarta ch. 8, Har. S. Hárf. ch. 16 (in a verse), Hák. S. Góða ch. 12, 15, 19, Ó. H. ch. 151, Eb. ch. 31, Landn. 3. ch. 15 (in the Hb.), Bjarn. 51 sqq., Sturl. iii. 127. As for Yule games cp. the Norse and Danish Jule-buk, Jóla-geit (Ivar Aasen) = a Yule goat, Dan. Jule-leg = a Yule game.

Á. (of 12 is made to serve for M. M. (N. or M.) in the baptismal formula, as in the law formula, yfir höfði Jóni, against M. M., see Njála. Jónsbók, f. John's book, the code of laws of 1281, named after John lawyer (lögmaðr), who brought the book from Norway to Icel. 1281, Árna S.

II. St. John Baptist's Day (June 24) is in the northern countries a kind of midsummer Yule, and was in Norway and Sweden celebrated with bonfires, dances, and merriment; and the fairies and goblins of every kind are connected with St. John's summer as well as with Yule-eve in winter. The name of the varies.—Jóns-dagr, m., Jóns-messa, u. f., Jónsvöku-dagr, day, mass of St. John = the 24th of June; Jóns-nótt, f., Jónsvöku-nótt, f., St. John's eve, 'John's-wake,' Rb. 530, Sturl. iii. 59, N. i. 340, 343, Fms. vii. 357, ix. 7: Jónsvöku-skeið, Fms. x. 49: Jónsvöku-leiti, id. In Norway the feast is at present called Jónsvaka = Jónsvaka the fires Jónsvaka-brising (cp. the Brisinga-men of the Edda). The of this feast is no doubt heathen, being a worship of light and that which has since been adapted to a Christian name and the Church calendar. For the fairy tales connected with this feast, see Ísl. i. which tales again call to mind Shakespeare's Midsummer Night's Dream. Jónsmessu-öl, n. ale brewed for St. John's day, N. G. K

K (ká) is the tenth letter of the alphabet; in the common Runes was represented by Þ (kaun); the Anglo-Saxon k was called cēan c cēn = Germ. kien, a pine or fir-tree; but as this was not a Norse word the Scandinavians represented it by the Norse word nearest in sound to it, kann (a boil or scab), which bears witness of the Anglo-Saxon origin of the old Norse Runic poem.

B. PRONUNCIATION.—The k is sounded hard or aspirate, the pronunciation varying as that of g does, see p. 186; it is hard in kaldr, korn, kunna, aspirate in kel, kem, kenna, kið, kyssa, kæti, keyri, vefja, etc. the only difference is that k has the same sound, whether initial, medial, kaka, kikir, just as in English: in modern Danish the medial has been softened into g, e. g. Icel. sök, vaka, líka, Engl. sake, wak like, are in Danish sounded sag, vaage, lige, whereas Sweden and Norway as well as Iceland have kept the old pronunciation. 2. t letter k before t and s is sounded as g, thus okt and ogt, þykkt and þyfs sliks and sliqs are sounded alike; and so k is now and then misplaced MSS., e. g. lakt = lagt, heilakt = heilagt. The spelling and other points referring to k have already been treated under C, p. 93; for qu = kv s. Gramm. p. xxxvi. (II. i. 6).

C. CHANGES.—The change of initial kn into hn has been mentioned in the introduction to letter H (B. II. 2. 7), where however 'hnefi' ought to be struck out of the list: for the changes of nk into kk see the introduction to letter N. II. according to Grimm's law, the Teut. answers to the Gr. and Lat. g; thus Lat. genus, genu, gent-is, Gr. γῆς = Icel. kyn, kné, kúnd, etc.: but in borrowed words no change is taken place, as in Keisari, kista, kerti, kjallari, = Lat. Caesar, cista, cella; the words borrowed in that way are very numerous in this letter but there are some slang or vulgar words, which seem not borrowed and yet no change has taken place.

kaðall, m., dat. kaðli, [prob. like Engl. cable, borrowed from m Lat. capulum, caplum; the word perhaps denotes twisted ropes, for elden times the Scandinavians made their cables of walrus skin, svörð — a cable, esp. as a naut. term, Fms. ii. 279, vii. 82, 283, Ó. H. 28, F. ii. 543, Gullþ. 8, passim.
